Peyton H. Snook.

Christmas Announcement.

Christmas ordinarily comes on the 25th of December, but if the immense stock of Christmas goods and elegant Furniture foreign and domestic, now on the way for Snook's Furniture House does not reach here by that date the festivities, as far as Atlanta is concerned, will be postponed.

$10,000 worth Cabinets and Bric.a-Brac.

I have ten thousand dollars worth of cabinets, bric-a-brac and easels ordered for my Christmas display and they are now enroute to Atlanta. When open and in place they will make the handsomest display ever seen in a Furniture house this side of Cincinnati and not excelled by anything in that city.

Don't buy any Christmas presents until you have seen my Christmas stock. A present to meet the full measure of what it is intended for should be useful as well as artistic, should be some article always in sight to bring to mind the giver. Nothing is so beautful and at the same time so useful as a piece of art furniture---an easel, a cabinet, a plaque, a sconce, a screen, or an elegant chair or a ladies' toilet.

For the first time since Atlanta has been a city there is not only no reason.

But Absolutely no Excuse for any Atlantian, or for any Georgian, who loves his state, to leave its bordsrs to buy anything in the way of furniture, cabinets or bric-a-brac, no matter how costly or elegant an article may be wanted. I have more than surpassed in my display this time anything ever attempted before.

Extra Salesmen for the Holiday Season.

Owing to the immense rush for my goods, complaint has been made that my customers had to wait too long for the salesmen, I have added a force of extra salesmen that can wait on whatever crowd may come to the store, and who can dispose of five thousand dollars worth of furniture a day without delaying any customer. I have extra facilities in every respect.

Open at Night During the Holidays.

In order to accommodate the public, I have arranged for a brilliant illumination of my entire establishment, and will keep open until ten o'clock at night for ten days prior to Christmas eve.

Parties wishing to secure Christmas presents can have any article in my stock ticketed and delivered in any part of this or adjoining states, or at any residence in the city, on Christmas eve without fail. It will be well to avoid the rush of the last day before Christmas and to secure what is wanted now or to order duplicates if necessary.

Remember.

That Snook's Christmas stock will be the largest, the richest, the costliest ever shown in a Southern city. The warehouses and factory of every city in the North and West has been ransacked to secure the latest and most beautiful novelties.

In spite of this I have never lost sight of the corner-stone of ...osperity and the confi... ...ous patrona...

Gay.

A. O. M. GAY,

THE PEACHTREE CLOTHIER.

Never in the history of Atlanta have her retail establishments exhibited a more healthy activity than at the present. The fall trade has at last opened up in earnest, and our business men are vieing with each other in pushing their respective enterprises to the utmost. Among the most energetic establishments we find Gay's Clothing Emporium taking the lead with one of the largest and most elegant stocks of Men's, Boy's and Children's Clothing to be found anywhere in Georgia. The vim and energy with which this house conducts its business are facts well known to the public and may be regarded as the source of the wonderful prosperity which has marked its career.

This popular Clothing House as usual comes to the front this season with all the latest styles and novelties in men's and children's wear at its usual low prices. Its counters are packed with every style, quality and price of clothing, and each article is guaranteed to be strictly as represented. Mr. Gay specially invites the ladies of Atlanta to inspect his stock of Boy's and Children's Clothing which is undoubtedly the handsomest in the city; and in short a call at 37 Peachtree street will be productive of much good to all who make it.

THE CONSTITUTION.

ATLANTA, December 7.—I dined with Ballard Smith, of the New York Herald, the other night, and the conversation turned on the next presidential election.

"I think few things were ever more certain in our politics," said Mr. Smith, "than that the democrats will elect the next president. Or rather that the regular republican nominee will be beaten."

"Then the regular democratic nominee must beat him?" suggested some one.

"I don't know about that. There are hundreds of thousands of republicans who are dissatisfied with the party management. They cannot be brought to vote for the party nominee, even when he is personally unobjectionable—as witness the overwhelming defeat of Folger in New York against whom not a word could be said. But it i doubtful if these dissatisfied republicans would vote for the nominee of the "machine" elements of the democratic party, such as Tammany for example."

"How will the fight be made then?"

"It is easy to see how. Say that Mr. Cleveland makes such a governor as the business men and conservative people, irrespective of party, will approve. Put forward as the representative of these interests he would sweep the country certainly and overwhelmingly."

A gentleman at the table suggested that with a million dollars cash he could defeat the democrats by paying a southern congressman to move for the payment of the confederate bonds, and by establishing incendiary bourbon papers throughout the south.

"The time has passed for that sort of thing," said Mr. Smith. "The time has been when the republican ranks could be closed by almost any sort of rallying cry. You notice in the last campaign that even when Folger raised the alarm about the unsettling of values and of "panic," to which New York has always been particularly susceptible, it failed to check the anti-Folger current and the answer to it was 193,000 adverse majority. The best republicans (and I'm inclined to believe the bulk of republicans) have become convinced that the management of the party is thoroughly corrupt and bad, and if Cleveland gives New York a clean administration, I do not think one million or ten million dollars could defeat his election to the presidency in 1884. It is quite probable that he will fall out with the democratic politicians of New York. He will have a head of his own, and will not be the tool of Tammany or of any other clique. The opposition of such an element would really be of benefit."

"Is Cleveland a strong man personally?"

"He is a safe man and an honest man, without having the intellectual force that would of itself command the presidency. It is his position and opportunity more than anything else that will advance him. Pattison, of Pennsylvania, is a stronger man than Cleveland and more forceful. He is out of the question as he is too young to take the presidency if he were elected. If he had been born nine months earlier than he was, I believe he would crowd Cleveland out. Pennsylvania is about as important as New York, in certain view, more important. Pattison is a more magnetic and a broader man than Cleveland, and his very youth would be an element in his favor. He has also the quality of reserve and dignity which is a good deal if he were nine months older it would probably be Pattison that would fill the public eye three years from now. As it is it will be Cleveland, if he at all meets the expectations of his friends."

Mr. Smith has traveled extensively over New York and Pennsylvania lately, and his facilities for obtaining information have been very great.

By the way, Mr. Smith tells a story of a North Carolina wedding. It runs this way: It was in the Carolina backwoods, a country couple and a country parson. Though a Baptist, the minister wore an old surplice. When he had finished the ceremony, he said:

"An' them 'uns who God hath joined"—

"Stop thar, parson," said the groom; "don't say them 'uns, say these 'uns!"

"John," said the parson, "I tech you at school, and I say them 'uns."

"These 'uns," shouted the groom, drawing his pistol.

The parson seing the movement fired through his surplice and the groom dropped dead—winging the parson as he went down. There was a lively fusillade of perhaps thirty shots. When the smoke cleared away a half dozen men were on the floor. The bride, peeping over the pulpit to which she had fled for refuge, gazed mournfully on the scene, and said:

"Them a self cockin' pistols is a playin' h—ll with my prospecks!"

Of course the story is an impossible one, and yet said Mr. Smith:

"That is the staple story of the south that is circulated and believed throughout the north. While such a thing could hardly have happened in North Carolina any more than in New York, the average northern man smiles incredulously when you tell him that this performance is improbable at a Carolina wedding."

A broker gave me the following story yesterday Said he:

"Watch for a surprise in Georgia railroad stock. You know the Central and Georgia roads control the Western road of Alabama. The only obligations against that road are $3,000,000 of bonds indorsed by the Georgia and Central. There is no stock. It is now proposed to issue $5,000,000 of new bonds. Of these $3,000,000 will be placed in trust to take up the $3,000,000 of indorsed bonds now out. The remaining $2,000,000 will be divided between the Georgia and Central, giving them $1,000,000 each o bonds. These bonds can sell at par, for the road is undoubtedly worth $5,000,000, and with $3,000,000 held in trust the remainder can be sold."

"What will be done with this cash surplus?"

"I only know as to the Georgia road. Their $1,000,000 can either be put in their bank and used as additional banking capital or it can be paid out as a cash dividend. In the the first case it will increase the annual dividend, coming in as increased earnings from the bank. In the other case it would be a cash dividend of $2 a share on the 42,000 shares of capital. I think the last is the most probable course."

"Has it been decided that this scheme is to be put through?"

"My information comes direct that President Phinizy, at a meeting where the plan of issuing stock on the Western road was proposed, suggested the bonding scheme and the division of the surplus bonds. His suggestion was favorably considered, and he was requested to see whether he could get the directors of the Georgia road to agree to it. I am informed that he now has written authority from his board to put the Georgia road into the scheme, and my belief is that it will be carried out."

I give the above for what it is worth. My informant has facilities for getting information, and is sincere in his statement.

In the historical department at the Art Loan are two worn and dirty ti... ...framed ... roads, For G...

M. M. Tidwell; For Senator, J. M. Calhoun; Representative, B. H. Overby. The other, For Governor, Joseph E. Brown; Congress, L. J. Gartrell; Senator, J. I. Whitaker; Representative, J. G. Westmoreland. These are probably the only tickets left of the hundreds of thousands of tickets of that famous struggle in which Hill and Brown were first pitted against each other, and the feud began between them that lasted for a quarter of a century.

Just back of these relics of an opening rivalship hang the life-size portraits of the two rivals taken in virtue of their colleagueship in the United States senate. What vast concerns fluctuate between the days when the tickets were printed and when the portraits were painted. What desperate struggles—what momentous affairs—the slow-growing forces of disunion, the inexorable approach of war, the bloody scenes of the strife, the destruction of slavery, the reconstruction of a shattered republic. In the working out of all these problems the two young statesmen were pitted against each other and looked at things from opposing points of view. Each was a leader of his faction, and each potential as a leader. They came together as friends when each had reached by different routes the highest honor that the state could give. With the achievement of this honor is closed the career of the two youngsters which began with the tickets and progressed to the portraits. One has gone to his long rest, followed by the love of his people and the other after more than twenty years of public service turns longingly toward the shades of private life.

The city is to be congratulated no less than the library, on the announcement now first made public that the Art Loan will not only pay its expenses, but will put a net profit of $1,500 to $2,000 into the library treasury. This result is unexpected, and proves that the directors builded wiser than they knew. At the close of the first week of the Art Loan it was estimated that the net loss on the Art Loan would be $1,000, and the directors agreed that in view of the high character of the exposition and the good it had done, they could afford to pay the loss and still profit on the experiment. The unique excellence of the show, however, has drawn crowds that the dead-line is passed, and the book last night showed a profit of about $1,000 that will go into new book or the sinking fund. Next week, which will be the last week, ought to add another $1,000.

John Goodwin, the newly elected mayor, has had a very remarkable career in Atlanta. He came here a raw country boy, from Powder Springs, and was a reporter on the old Atlanta Herald. In writing up ward meetings he became interested in politics, and soon took a hand on his own account. He offered for the city council and was elected to the surprise of everybody, who thought that the unknown country boy had no sort of showing with the practical politicians. Goodwin has made many races, but has never been beaten. He always has strong opposition, but his majority is always sure and decisive. Without eloquence, affability or showy qualities, and with no fortune to back him or old family alliances, he wins by common sense and quiet management. With the possible exception of Bill Hulsey, he is the youngest mayor Atlanta ever selected, and as the head of the chief and capital city of the state for the two years that are pretty sure to be the most important years of her history, he occupies a responsible and delicate position. But it is a place where common sense will save him where ... ...er qualities would fail him.

When the Hon. Joshua Hill was in the United States senate he bought for $7,000 an old field lying on the suburbs of Washington. He thought little of it, but held it as an investment for his children. The British minister built a fine residence in the quarter in which this land was situated, made it a fashionable district and Mr. Hill's purchase is now worth perhaps $25,000—certainly a very large sum. I get this information from Mr. Theodore Cone, a former citizen of Georgia, who now lives in Washington.

I was amazed at the beauty and richness of the interior of St. Philips church, as shown under the electric light at the Rommell-Westmoreland wedding. I had never been in the new church before, and though I had heard it universally praised, was always prepared for the superb effect. Surely there is no church interior in the south that will equal it. It is at once an honor to Atlanta and a monument to the taste and patience of Moser, the architect.

Treasurer Watson, of the Cartersville car factory, tells me that the factory paid 25 per cent cash dividend and passed 12 per cent. cash to a reserve fund the first year of its creation. It built 600 cars that year and has a capacity of over 1,200 cars per annum. As it cleared 37 per cent net cash its first twelve-months, and is doing better the present year, it may be put up as an example of what money and skill can do in manufacturing in Georgia.

I heard one mother say to another yesterday: "If you want your daughter to grow up graceful and comely, give her a cold bath every morning, give her hair one hundred strokes with a stiff brush, let her breakfast be made of graham bread and syrup, give her broad shoes with low heels, and put her to bed at 7 o'clock, every night."

Our telegraphic fire alarm has fairly paid for itself in the prevention of fires. In four minutes after this discovery of fire the department can be counted on for any part of the city. To make the same point a month ago would have taken eight minutes, and a minute counts for a great deal when a fire is getting under way.

By the Way I Hear That

—A petition is being circulated, asking that the estate and bondsmen of Willis Biggers be relieved from liability on the money lost by the Citizens bank failure. The petition recites that he and his bondsmen were at no fault, and should not be held liable. It is signed by nearly every tax payer in the city, and the council will probably grant it.

—The general opinion of the boys at the exchange is that Bradstreet's estimate of the crop is too low but there are many old stagers who say that the correct thing is to put the figures just a round million above last year's figures. This is about Bradstreet's figure, 6,400,000. If these figures are correct, the late months ought to increase in price.

ARP'S DISADVANTAGE

IN LIVING A LONG WAY OFF FROM A DEPOT.

An Onslaught From Mormon Dupes, Ingersoll Interrogation Points and Spiritualistic Skylights—A Few Words of Soberness—Joe Brown's Gift—The Legislature.

I dident mean any offense to anybody and Ishant do it any more, for ever since I writ that Mormonism was dying, and spiritualism was about dead, and Bob Ingersol's fantastics were passing away with the comet, somebody keeps sending me papers and pamphlets to prove taint so, and one of 'em says I'm not a born fool but am a fool because I live five miles from a depot. That little paper is called Light Thinkers, and is published in your city and advertises several mediums there, and has the last five messages from the spirit land, one of 'em from Lucretia Mott and one from a baby in baby talk. Now you and your folks live near a depot and I want to know if this thing is all regular and bona fide and licensed by the city, or is it something just broke loose with no chain on? I know they had such things away up in Boston where there are lots of depots but I didn't know our people had caught the disease. I don't want to move but if there is anything in this depot business I shall have to sell out and get further for fear the contagion will spread. We will all know enough about the spirit land by waiting and I'm willing to wait. There are a good many over there very dear to me and if they can't communicate except through some strange woman at a depot and a dollar for toll I reckon we will have to live on in silence until our time comes. Some feller sent me Bob Ingersoll's organ, published at Indianopolis, called The Age, a large double sheet full of doctrine and devilment in general. It defies God and the devil and ghosts, and drums for recruits to the great liberal league which they say is taking that country. It advertises Bob Ingersoll's dialogues with the Deity and Moses and Jesus Christ, and spells all the sacred names with small letters. It tolerates nothing but infidelity, and every sentence is an insult to a believer in the bible or in Christianity. The league sent a letter to Mr. Brown, who was a candidate for state auditor, and demanded his answer to nine questions, and said that on the character of his answer depended the vote of the league. Mr. Brown did answer, and said among other things:

In my humble judgment there can be no true morality that is not essentially Christian.

I owe all the good that I possess; all the good that I may have accomplished, or ever expect to accomplish in this world, to the influence of the religion of the bible. To this hallowed book more than all other books combined are we as a nation indebted for the magnificence of our free institutions, and the grand prosperity that with beaming smiles irradiates this "land of the free and home of the brave."

This sacred book is entitled to the highest consideration of every individual, at all times, in every place, and under all circumstances.

Its teachings I revere, and its principles I shall cherish, whatever may betide. You say upon my answer depends the vote of the members of your league. If so, be it. My principles are not in the market.

And the editor of the Age says in reply:

And this disrespectful, impudent, ignorant, narrow-minded christian bigot, ignoramous and ass was probably elected.

So I reckon I will have to take back what I said, for I find that I am getting behind the Age, and the Light Thinkers. My comfort is in perusing history for I find that these same sort of jack-alanterns have been coming and going in the swamps of infidelity and skepticism for nearly two thousand years, while the light of Christianity has never dimmed but grown brighter and higher with rolling years. I have no fear for the aged of our people nor the middle-aged, but the young men will have to take their places before long, and these new doctrines are attractive and captivating, and I hope they will consider long and well before they give up the faith of their fathers. If the spires of the churches in this Christian land do not point heaven-ward, I know of no other sign that does.

The law makers have gone home I suppose and I am obliged to say they have in my judgment done well as far as they have gone. It is a good sensible working legislature, and I have hope of the country, for I do not believe that money can bribe or corrupt em. They are content with the railroad commission. They have elected good judges, and they have refused to accept Governor Brown's gift to the college. I don't find fault with the governor for putting on those conditions, for it is his money and he can do as he pleases, but the state is not poor enough to take such gifts. I think that South Carolina is just poor enough, and hope she will take it, but I wish the governor would reconsider and strike out the conditions, and show a little more faith in the wisdom of our people—or what would be still better, put a hundred thousand dollars on top of it, and build a college of his own up here among the mountains where he was raised. Cherokee Georgia wants such an institution, for there are a heap of folks in this region who don't live near a depot.

BILL ARP.

ON THE NOLA CHUKEY.

An Artist's Odd Character Studies in East Tennessee—The Portrait of a Moonshiner.

LEADVALE, Tenn., December 8.—Artists are not common about here. A field easel in my baggage caused the clerk at a Morristown hotel so much anxiety that he inquired if it was not a "paten gate?" "No," I replied carelessly, "it's a patent fruit drier." The crowd about the office laughed outrageously. Rob Harle, who was to take me to the mouth of Chukey river, my sketching rounds, drew me aside and explained that I had innocently "trompt" on that fellows [illegible]rest the and might get myself into trouble. [illegible] consequence. "You see" he went on to [illegible]plain. "This house has been investing in [illegible]tent fruit driers, and the last one of [illegible]em has turned out no 'count." [illegible]his was warning enough. I have been very [illegible]vil ever since, keeping my mouth shut, my [illegible]ds busy and my eyes and ears wide open! [illegible]ave heard much that was no less interesting to me than painting character studies of these mountain people. For instance, I had my easel planted in front of a log cabin with mud chimney, when I overheard the woman on the inside say: "Chil'n, come 'way from thar. Don't ack like you haint never [illegible]ed no stranger before." The chil'n [illegible] question were girls. Julia, the [illegible]ungest, was two years old, while the others [illegible] demure little old womanish looking [illegible]s scarcely more than ten or twelve years [illegible]ge, dressed in homespun dresses. Their [illegible]s of tangled sun burned flax hung in as [illegible]y different ways as the mane on a yearl[illegible]mule colt. They soon ran into the house [illegible]e shortly afterward I heard the woman [illegible]. This time it was, "Chil'n do take [illegible] out and play with her. G—o o—n! [illegible], ef ye'll take her out an' quit a pesterin', [illegible]ive ye the snuff!" A short pause, dur[illegible]me she comes to the door with [illegible]ancing delightedly about her. [illegible]kirt of her antique calico [illegible]ide, she held it something [illegible]ff from her, as a woman [illegible] for her dress pocket. [illegible] draws forth a little [illegible]ke from her ea[illegible]sticks, having [illegible]ether on the [illegible] happy. It [illegible]bin that I [illegible] chewers, [illegible]g an oh, [illegible]n on the [illegible]t—such [illegible]ngth of [illegible]n, sav[illegible]s coun[illegible]an in …

herself up till she looked McGregor's wife over again.

To-day an old fellow came over from the knobs to pose for me as a moonshiner—one of the roughest, most illiterate of men, and yet good nature itself! He came in just as we were going to dinner. He had dined, but Bob insisted on Uncle Jimmie joining us. As he walked out, he observed in his dry, slow, inimitable way: "Yes, I'll see if you've got anything better'n I had at home, fur I didn't eat no ways more'n the weight of a smoothin' iron. When I got to work, he said frankly, "Painting must be a mighty piddlin' business," and many more such original remarks, ending finally with telling me of a spell of winter fever he had had. "Doc Funkhouser said I had the sneakin'es' pulse he ever hunted for."

A little white flower, which has powdered the meadows with its whiteness since the other flowers have disappeared, he called "little summer farewells." One of the richest studies of character I found in "old man Hall," who with his children, grand children, great grand children, one hundred and six in all, have a whole mountain-top to themselves. Seven of his grand children and his daughter were with him that night, but the little 11x18 one room of a cabin was plenty big enough. We slept soundly, though the moonlight fell in silver bars across the ample bed covers. Such bear stories! "A pound of bar bacon 'ill go a heap fudder," said he "a seasonin' cabbage than hog meat will."

When we started to go I gave the children's Aunt Sally a quarter with which to get some candy for the children when she went again to the store. She took it reluctantly. "Hate to take it from yer, I know yer welcome to all you've hed." "Oh," said I "my partner there has settled the bill." "Bill!" she exclaimed horrified, "why, thar ain't no bill, is ter granpap?" The old man declared he never charged a stranger anything in all his life. But Bob had made him accept a two dollar bill. "Why," continued Miss Sally, "Didn't the Marster in the good book say we must take in strangers and take keer on 'em?"

ANOTHER ARCTIC SEARCH.

The Government to Search for Lieutenant Greely and His Companions.

WASHINGTON, December 8.—The United States government has another Arctic search on its hands, which will be begun early next summer, and for which an appropriation must be made early in the coming session of congress. A year ago last July First Lieutenant Greely, of the Fifth cavalry, and Second Lieutenants Kislingbary and Lockwood, of the Eleventh and Twenty-third infantry, with twenty-one men from the signal corps and army, started for Lady Franklin bay in latitude 81° 20', longitude 64° 58'. Their purpose was to establish a meteorological station, which the government proposed to maintain for three years. The station is the northermost of a chain of stations established by the governments of the United States, Austro-Hungary, Denmark, France, Germany, Great Britain, Holland, Italy, Norway, Sweeden, and Russia, for the purpose of taking simultaneous observations in meteorology, magnetism, ocean currents, tides, structure of ice, density of sea water, etc. It is the first practical and united effort to find out what the extreme north has to reveal in these branches of science. The observations began at the chain of stations which were established around the pole on the 1st of August. The other station established by the United States at Point Barrow, Alaska, is about as far north as any station established by the foreign governments. The party at Lady Franklin bay is in a very inaccessible place. The intention was that it should be visited every year by a relief and supply expedition, which should take up men to supply the places of those who might be ill, or who might have died during the year, and fresh food and clothing. It is now over a year since anything has been heard from Lieutenant Greely and his party. They had a large double-walled house, a supply of provisions for two years, and they were near a bed of coal. It is presumed that they are safe, but nothing is known about them, because the relief expedition sent up this year failed to reach the station, the ice being impassable. The experience for the last forty years has taught the masters of whalers that Lady Franklin bay can be reached only about once in seven years by water. Congress, indeed, came very near leaving the matter uncared for entirely, for it was the 22d of June before the appropriation was made, and General Hazen was about to engage a vessel and fit her out on his own responsibility, when congress recollected that the country had twenty-five men depending on its action for comforts and necessaries. As it was, the expedition was delayed a week by this inaction of congress. The expedition of next summer is to get off not later than the 1st of July. While it is not expected that any harm has come to Lieutenant Greely and his party, the expedition is to start out prepared to winter if the straits are impassable, and to reach Lady Franklin bay with sleds. The secretary of war is taking great pains in the selection of an officer to command the party, and General Terry has been asked to name some of the younger officers who have become used to all the hardships of the weather of the northwest. They will not come back until they find Greely and his party. Congress will be asked to make the appropriation, about $35,000, early in the session.

DIMPLES MADE TO ORDER.

How the Prettiest of Dimples Are Made on Women's Arms—A Woman's Story.

From the Chicago Tribune.

That artificial dimples can be and are made when and where desired, seems to be an established fact, from the following confession: "Learning that there was a place in the city where dimples were made to order, I went there out of curiosity. I was shown into a parlor somewhat resembling a dentist operating room. There was a glass case full of bottles, washes and wigs, and a regular dentist's chair that suggested a world of comfort. To me presently came a dapper little man in a velvet cut-away coat, and whose face wore a complacent smirk. I bashfully suggested the dimple question, and asked for some points. I really wanted a dimple in my arm, and told him so. But I insinuated my disbelief in his ability to produce the necessary article. Whereupon he convinced me by practice. This is how it is done: My arm being bare, and the exact spot indicated, he placed a small glass tube, the orifice of which was extremely small, upon the spot. This tube had working within it a piston, and was so small that when the handle was drawn up the air was exhausted from the tube and it adhered to the flesh, raising a slight protuberance. Around this raised portion the operator daintily tied a bit of scarlet silk, and then took away his suction machine. The little point of skin that was thus raised he sliced off with a wicked-looking knife, bringing the blood. I tried hard not to scream, but it was so unexpected that I had to. Then he bound up the arm, placing over the wound a small silver object like an inverted cone, the point of which was rounded and polished. This little point was adjusted so as to depress the exact center of the cut. Then he told me to go away and not touch the spot until the next day. When I came at that time he dressed my arm again, and this operation was repeated for five days, when the wound was healed. The silver cone was removed, and there sure enough beneath it was the prettiest dimple in the world! And all I had to pay was $10.

Possessed of a Devil.

From the Dublin, Ga., Post.

On yesterday J. S. Drew, drove his mule into the flat on the east side of the Dublin ferry and got behind the buggy while his little son held the mule by the bridle. The mule became possessed of a devil and began to back. Mr. Drew set himself against the buggy and tried to stop it, but the mule was too much for him and pushed him, buggy and all over the side of the flat into the river waist deep. The mule was loosed and … [illegible] …bout difficulty or …

THE BIG FOUR.

A STORY OF PLUCK AND BOYISH ENDURANCE.

"A Boy Wanted"—How the Advertisement Sounded in the Country—In Town and at Work—Small Savings and Big Results—From Newsboys to Real Estate Speculators.

The Big Four of THE CONSTITUTION office are the Green boys, and yet the Green boys have made but little noise in the world.

Who are the Green boys?

There is Sam, eighteen years old, who, since the age of ten, has been the mailing clerk. Second is Philip, aged sixteen, who, from the age of eight, has been errand boy and telegraph clerk. Several years ago these boys made their appearance in Atlanta, and instead of idling their time away like so many other boys, they went to work. Their sphere was humble and their pay was small, but they had the faculty of putting in full time and holding on to what they got. Their father and mother, worthy citizens of Hancock county, came here with them, and instead of taking their money and spending it, they judiciously advised them in its investment. Soon it was evident that the Green boys were not only living but thriving, and the parents found in their children a pleasure instead of a burden.

A couple of years later two more were added to the number—Charley, now aged 14, the mail carrier, and Dan, now 12, a full grown competent typographer, and thus the Big Four of THE CONSTITUTION was complete. With the sense of older people they saw there was money in the land, and especially in the land when divided into town lots. It looks preposterous to say that a family of small children, poor and without means, should be able to do any more than make a living, food is so scarce and living so dear, but there is is a secret which always leads to wealth, and that is to spend less than you make. Be the accretion ever so small, yet so long as it is an accretion—it makes its own richer with every revolving year. The Green boys bought a lot—it matters not what its price—but when the deed to it was duly recorded and the document itself safely stowed away in a safe place, the Green boys could see no reason why the experiment should not be repeated. Each of the four agreed to put away a certain per cent out of their wages, and in time another lot was added, and yet another. Finally, with the true instinct of the financier, their eyes rested upon a vacant square of one acre near the barracks. They concluded that what had been done once could be done again, and before many months were passed, the owner of that acre was induced to change his title in favor of the Green boys.

WHAT THEY HAVE DONE.

Summed up, the case stands thus: A father with four small boys, sees the necessity of finding something for them to do, and of going to where he could find it. In the language of one of them, they "had been born all over Georgia," when the happy thought struck the father of removing to Atlanta. Once here he found the streets full of bad and vicious boys, who neither worked nor cared to work; smoking cigarettes and growing old by dissipation before they had yet reached the age of men. He found also that there was plenty work for willing hands to do, and that by co-operation the smallest salaries aggregated large results. He put the first two to work, and in time they were joined by the other two. For ten years they have lived comfortably, and grown pretty well up to the age of young manhood. By husbanding their resources they have amassed a little property which should put to shame not only the great bulk of well-paid mechanics and clerks, but also many business men. They own five town lots, which would readily bring $250 each, or $1,250 in all. They own a full acre in the first ward, the price of which is liable to go up to figures, the possession of which would have staggered the family ten years ago. If necessary, they could divide it into ten stylish building lots, worth $250 each, any day, which would be $2,500, making, with $1,250 previously mentioned, $3,750. Now, here is the groundwork of a fortune, and the Green boys are now showing that they are equal to the occasion. They have taken out a number of shares in a real estate association. They feel that they have earned the right to a nice home, and they first propose to build one which shall have a front parlor and a decorated window. Then they will still have left fourteen choice building lots, upon which they propose to build, from time to time, houses the rent of which will carry themselves through the association, and before the eldest of the boys shall have completed his twenty-fifth year a property will be theirs such as is accumulated by but few men, and upon which they have still the full active age of manhood to build a magnificent competence. Not only have they accumulated property, but they have also learned the blessed habit of wisely giving. They have given an uncle a lot upon which to build a home; they have entertained their friends from the country who have come to Atlanta to find employment, and put them on the way of success; and they have met all the duties of their humble station with promptness. In another respect they have also displayed their habit of co operation—if you hit one of them you have the whole family to fight. Touch a Green, and you are in a peck of trouble.

LETTER FROM MRS. GREEN.

ATLANTA Ga., October 13th, 1882.—Pardon me for addressing you this morning, as my little son informed me that you anticipated noticing their work in THE CONSTITUTION, I therefore feel it my duty to give you a sketch of their lives in order that you may better understand their true value. I and their father were reared in the lap of luxury, as our parents were both very wealthy. My maiden name was Bethea. I was raised in Hancock county, Georgia, was married in 1859. When the war commenced our property was valued at $57,000, and when it closed we were almost penniless. My husband then read law under Judge Linton Stephens; was admitted to the bar and located in Vienna, Dooly county, southwestern Georgia. He succeeded very well for three years, when his health became so much impaired, until his physician informed him that it was impossible for him to live in that country. At this time my husband was almost a complete wreck. The loss of his property and then his health was more than he could bear. Seeing my condition, I summoned all the courage I could and determined never to give up. I had four little boys at this time, Sam, Philip, Charlie and Dan. Their ages were respectily 11, 9, 7 and 5 years. Now, my greatest puzzle was how I should manage to educate them.

A SUDDEN REVELATION.

At this crisis, the glorious old CONSTITUTION, by chance fell into my hands. In its columns I found a comple history of the free schools in Atlanta and also an account of the little news boys selling papers. All this I read aloud to my children and they were very much interested in the account of this newspaper traffic which was a business never before heard of by them. My oldest one began immediately to persuade me to move to Atlanta where he could sell papers every morning for a living, and then go to school. I decided to take his advice at once and came to this place seven years ago the 10th of last January. My two oldest were shown THE CONSTITUTION office the next morning and made ten cents selling papers. This no doubt was the happiest day of their lives. They were so overjoyed they could not sleep that night for thinking of what was in store for them the next morning. Many times during the day they would try to cheer me by saying that they could help me to make a living now, and they have kept their word. Yes, bare-footed the most of the time, they tramped through sleet, snow and rain for two years before they were able to make more than a support. Many a morning have I followed them to the gate two hours before day, when it was so dark and rainy until I could not see their forms across the sidewalk, and my heart would be so full of sympathy I could not speak one cheering word to them. Yet their voices, which seemed almost super-human would ring out in the darkness, "mother quit crying, we don't mind the cold, we are going to make money for you this morning," and off they would go knowing that the doors of the great CONSTITUTION was open for their reception.

SCHOOLS AND TOWN LOTS.

They entered the 8th grade of Walker street school the next week after their arrival here. My oldest was promoted to the high school last term, and the three others were promoted to the 1st grade … Walker st… same time. After the first two years they began to save some money every week over and above their support. Following my advice they invested every cent of this in real estate. Each one bought a lot on the installment plan. After making the last payment they had a two-room house built on each lot, which houses they now rent for $20 per month. Their father took fifteen shares in the Home Building and Loan association for them the 10th of last April, and they pay to the company $15 per month on these shares. He also bought them a lot, containing one acre on the Garrison Hill from John H. James, three months ago, and they are paying for it at $10 per month on installments. They kept out of school this term in order to save up enough money to build us a comfortable house on this lot, to live in. They have been able to save $20 per week since the 1st of July. After selling papers three years they were given carriers' places; after this Sam was made assistant mailing clerk. This office he now holds, also he has the contract for folding the Sunday supplement. He hires his three brothers to assist in this job, and they do the work every Saturday night. Philip is still carrier, and also takes the night dispatches for THE CONSTITUTION. Charlie is mail carrier for THE CONTITUTION, and Dan, though only twelve years old, does a man's work and gets a man's pay as a compositor in THE CONSTITUTION office.

THE SECRET OF THEIR SUCCESS.

Constant employment, combined with pluck honesty and energy, is the secret of their success. They intend entering school again in January where they hope to remain until they graduate. They spend every night in the week at THE CONSTITUTION office, except Sunday night. They are very much devoted to me, and to receive my approval of their acts is the highest of their ambition. I do all I can to strengthen and encourage them to make men of honor and worth.

MRS. D. A. GREEN.

THE BIGGEST OF ALL.

A Sketch of the History of the Biggest Diamond in the World.

If genuine, the Braganza, in possession of the king of Portugal, is by far the largest diamond, not only now in existence, but of which there is any record. But its very size, weighing no less than 1,680 carats in the rough, has caused it to be suspected, and no opportunity has hitherto been afforded of examining it with sufficient care to warrant anything like a conclusive judgment as to its true character. It is also to be noticed that even were it ascertained to be a diamond, it might have to be greatly reduced in size, if not cleayed into two or more stones, in the cutter's hands. As a rule, the larger the stone the more it proportionately loses in size in the process necessary for the full development of its beauty. The loss is usually reckoned at about one half for moderately large gems. But for one of such large dimensions as the Braganza it could not safely be estimated at perhaps less than two-thirds. This would reduce the finished jewel to about 560 carats; but, even so, it would still remain exactly twice as large as the Great Mogul, the next largest cut stone of which we have any record. Consequently, pending the decision of the question regarding its real nature, it must stand at the head of our list of great diamonds.

One of the earliest and best accounts we have of this stone is that given by Mawe in his "Travels in Brazil." "A few leagues," he writes, "to the north of the Rio Plata is the rivulet named Abaite, celebrated for having produced the largest diamond. Three men named Antonio de Sousa, Jose Feliz Gomes and Thomas de Sousa, having being found guilty of high crimes, were banished into the interior, and ordered not to approach any of the capital towns, or to remain in civilized society, on pain of perpetual imprisonment.

Driven by this hard sentence into the most unrequented part of the country, they endeavored to explore new mines or new productions, in the hope that sooner or later they might have the good fortune to make some important discovery, which would obtain a reversal of their sentence, and enable them to regain their station in society.

They wandered about in this neighborhood, making frequent searches in its various mines, for more than six years, during which time they were exposed to a double risk, being continually liable to become the prey of the anthropophagi, and in no less danger of being seized by the soldiers of government. At length they, by hazard, made some trials in the river Abaite, at a time when its waters were so low, in consequence of a long season of drought, that a part of its bed was left exposed. Here, while searching and washing for gold, they had the good fortune to find a diamond nearly a pound in weight. Elated by this providential discovery, which at first they could scarcely believe to be real, yet hesitating between a dread of the rigorous laws relating to diamonds and a hope of regaining their liberty, they consulted a clergyman, who advised them to trust to the mercy of the state, and accompanied them to Villa Rica, where he procured them access to the governor. They threw themselves at his feet, and delivered to him the invaluable gem on which their hopes rested, relating all the circumstances connected with it.

The governor, astonished at its magnitude, could not trust the evidence of his senses but called the officers of the establishment to decide whether it was a diamond, who set the matter beyond all doubt. Being thus by the most strange and unforseen accident put in possession of the largest diamond ever found in America, he thought proper to suspend the sentence of the men as a reward for their having delivered it to him. The gem was sent to Rio de Janeiro, from whence a frigate was dispatched with it to Lisbon, whither the clergyman was also sent to make the proper representations respecting it. The sovereign confirmed the pardon of the delinquents, and bestowed some preferment on the holy father.

This famous stone, which has been valued by RomeDelisie at no less than $1,500,000,000, is said to be about the size of a goose's egg, and its weight is usually estimated at 1,680 carats which, at the rate of 150 carats to the ounce, would make rather over eleven ounces. M. Ferry makes it weigh 1,730 carats; and Emanuel as much as 1,880, though this figure may probably be a misprint for 1,680.

Murray tells us that Don John VI had a hole drilled through it, and it was suspended to his neck on gala days. Murray was not aware whether it was still among the crown jewels given up by Miguel, or had been previously pledged to carry on the war against the French. For this latter report, current in Murray's time, there seems to be no foundation; and according to all recent authorities, the stone would appear never to have been removed from the Portugese treasury, where it is jealously guarded against all inquisitive sightseers. For obvious financial motives, the government is naturally anxious that, whatever be its true character, it should continue to be regarded as a genuine diamond. On this point the strongest doubts have always been entertained.

Murray tells us, on the authority of a Mr. Magellan, that "a fragment was broken off from it by the ignorance of the person who found it, having struck it a blow with a hammer." This was the old rough-and-ready method of testing stones, the nature of which was not obvious at first sight. It was supposed that true diamonds resisted the heaviest blow of the hammer, whereas it is now well ascertained that they are easily split by cleavage; hence the circumstance here mentioned would not of itself imply that this stone was not a real diamond.

With regard to its value. Murray, rejecting Rome Delisle's preposterous estimate of $1,500,000,000, considers that, "according to the method of calculation by Jeffries," its value will be, in its present form, $28,224,000. But no price at all can be set upon a stone which is still in the rough state, and regarding the true character of which the greatest uncertainty prevails.

An Aged Escort.

From the Sumter, Ga., Republican.

Mr. F. W. Davis, of Sumter county, near Sumter City, who has lived in this county for forty years, was in the city Saturday morning. He was as lively in talk as he was fifty years ago, and acted as company to his daughter-in-law on a shopping expedition to town. He was born in 1790, and bids fair to live till his hundredth birthday. We wish him success in the prospect.

LABOR'S YIELD.

WHAT THERE IS CONCEALED IN GEORGIA SOIL.

Some Men Who Have Made Money on the Farm—Immense Yields of Cotton, Cane, Potatoes and Other Products of Industry—The Desert Supplied by Nature With Game.

That there is wealth in the land if there was only industry enough to extract it, cannot be better proven than by reading what has been done by intelligent farmers in different parts of the state, picked up at random from the state press. That young man who leaves his country home for privation and disappointment in city life is indeed to be pitied when, for one-third the labor and none of the uncertainty, he might make himself comfortable at home. But to the proofs:

From the Dawson, Ga., Journal.

Mr. J. B. F. Harrell, of this county, has raised this year on a six-mule farm 1500 bushels of oats, 90 bushels of wheat, 1800 bushels of corn, 1400 bushels of potatoes, 1200 gallons of syrup and 60 bales of cotton. Mr. Harrell has gathered 100 bushels of ground peas for seed, sold $50 worth of water-melons, and will fatten 6000 pounds of pork. Mr. Harrell has had one plow on his place, run by Alec Simpson, that made 14½ bales of cotton, 260 bushels of corn, 300 bushels of potatoes, besides gathering 50 bushels of ground peas and fattening 1,000 pounds of pork. This we call a self-sustaining farm, and this is the reputation that Mr. Harrell sustains in our county. We doubt if any man in the several counties around makes more money farming than Mr. Harrell, and if any man will take the pains to examine closely the list above and note the diversity of his products it will be seen at once that the secret of his success consists in raising every thing he consumes at home. There may be a few men in Terrell who can boast of raising more cotton to the mule than Mr. Harrell but we exceedingly doubt if there is one who makes more.

Mr. J. S. Jones, of this county, has produced this year at the rate of 763 gallons of syrup per acre. Allowing 40 gallons to the barrel, it is equal to 19 barrels per acre. Suppose now we estimate this syrup at 30 cents per gallon, and we have the prodigious fact of $228 90 as the proceeds of one single acre of ordinary Terrell county land. But suppose we put syrup at its true value, 40 cents per gallon, and we have $305.20, all the proceeds of one acre. Can anybody beat this? Mr. Jones brought us a specimen of his syrup and we pronounce it first-class.

From the Sandersville, Ga., Herald.

Mr. B. S. Kittrell from four acres of ground has made over 1100 gallons of good cane syrup, and has saved enough seed cane to plant as much land again. The syrup he has sold readily to merchants at 50 cents per gallon, and some at 60 cents. He has thus realized near $575 from four acres, or over $140 per acre. How does this compare with cotton? How few farmers realize $40 per acre from cotton, and one acre can be cultivated in cane with as little labor and expense as an acre in cotton. But "cotton is king." In common with his many friends, we regret that Mr. Kittrell will move at an early day to Johnson county his post-office, however, will still be at Oconee.

From the Griffin, Ga., News.

This is the record of good farming accomplished by Mr. Reuben E. Mann, of Madison county, the past year: With three plows he has made and gathered 640 bushels of oats, 165 bushels of wheat at a yield of 35 bushels to the acre, 5 tons of Bermuda hay, 800 bushels of corn, with fodder in proportion, a large quantity of peas and pea hay, 400 bushels of sweet potatoes, and 26 bales of cotton. He will make about 35 possibly 40 bales of cotton. His farm consists of 300 acres, is [illegible] partially in [illegible] land, two-thirds of it [illegible]

We think Mr. Stephens has some claim to being one of the crack one-horse farmers of the county. In addition to work upon his own farm he gathered seven bales of cotton for a neighbor.

From the Sandersville, Ga., Herald.

From one-eighth of an acre planted in cuttings of Buck yam potatoes Mr. G. W. Smith living below Tennille gathered 39 bushels of good potatoes, and from the same space planted in draws from the same potato he made 58 bushels. This latter yield is at the rate of 424 bushels per acre. Mr. Smith not only makes fine potatoes, but also fine crops of corn, oats, and peas as well as cotton, and as a consequence, keeps out of debt, and has a surplus to invest in land.

From the Newnan Ga., Herald.

Mr. L. [illegible] Attaway, of Cedar Creek district, has made two bales of cotton on one acre of land; besides, there were 40 fruit trees on the land. Mr. J. B. Newton, of Panther Creek, has an apple tree that has borne two crops of apples this year. I have seen some oats that came up voluntarily since oats were cut in June, headed out and are now fully ripe. This has been a fine year for second crops. Miss Texas Dickson sent us a specimen of a second crop June apple grown in her orchard in Newnan.

From the Sparta, Ga., Times.

Mr. Andrew Rocker, near our village, is said to have raised on his farm, this year, with eight horses, 1,200 bushels of corn and 80 bales of cotton. He is also reported to have one or two one horse farms that safely count on making 14 or 15 bales to the horse. In a week or two, if not hindered, Mr. Rocker will have completed his dam on Beaver-dam creek.

Mr. T. W. Rainwater killed two hogs last Thursday, weighing respectively, 325 and 216 pounds. These were yard pigs. Mr. R. has no dogs.

From the Walton, Ga., News.

The lands in Walton county will double in value in less than ten years. Mr. Harrison F. Upshaw, of this county, has made this year, with five plows, 150 bushels of wheat, 500 bushels of oats, 100 bushels of potatoes, corn enough to do him, and fifty-five heavy bales of cotton. Isn't this a good showing for the poor hills of Walton? Work and judgment will pay as well here as anywhere in the world, and the man who moves away from Walton, in search of a better country, is in his own light.

From the Newnan, Ga., Herald.

Allow me to tell the truth, however bad it may be. Two of the little "Pelts" went out last Sunday morning to pick up hickorynuts and picked from under an old clay root a large fat opossum. There is no doubt but they had better been at church or some interesting Sunday school, though if they had the family would have missed a mess of good fat opossum at a mighty scarce time.

From the Covington Enterprise.

Wild ducks are frequently seen on Dr. Douglass's fish pond near town.

The old men, young men, and boys of Cedar Shoals went on a big rabbit hunt Saturday.

Samuel Massey went fishing one morning last week and caught fifteen good-sized suckers. Can General Henderson and Dr. Wright beat it?

Mr. James Johnson, who is about three score years and ten, can shoot squirrels equal to most young men. He can also pick 130 pounds of cotton in one day.

Tom Mercer, the champion opossum hunter of this democratic district, says 'po… are fine this season, but he has only … 47 yet. Last year he caught 107. P… you can find … fellow around th… who can beat … in catching these varmints, but … it very serious…

From the Cuthbert, Ga., Enterprise.

Mr. Lawrence A. Duggan, of Spring Vale, has purchased the Matthews place of 350 acres, one and one-half miles below town, from Major Barfield, and is already moving to it, preparatory to pitching a crop for next year. Mr. A. H. Teel, near Morris Station, made sixteen bales of cotton on twenty-nine acres of land this year.

From the Sandersville, Ga., Mercury.

Mr. John A. Robinson has killed meat enough to do him and brought several large hogs to the city for sale. This is the way to farm, keep your smoke-house at home and not in the west. John is one of the best farmers in the county.

From the Harlem, Ga., Sentinel.

Mr. F. F. Moseley, of Grovetown, sent Messrs Fleming and Loflin last week ten potatoes weighing 75 pounds. Mr Ellis Phillips is as usual on the right line in farming. He has now in a large crop of grain.

From the Dooly Ga., Vindicator.

A few days ago we were the recipient of a a few apples of the second crop for this year, from the orchard of Colonel Tool. These apples were about the size of a hen egg and of a tolerably fair flavor.

From the Hawkinsville, Ga., News.

Mr. James Bohannon, of Dodge county, killed last week a pig, less than one year old, weighing 240 pounds.

NATURE'S DESSERT.

From the Athens, Ga., Banner.

Mr. Ham Dearing killed sixty odd birds in one morning.

From the Butler, Ga., Herald.

Mr. Gunn, living at Major Fickling mill, has captured the present year between seventy-five and one hundred 'possums during his leisure hours, all full grown and well fed.

From the Washington county, Ga., Herald.

W. H. Martin a colored man farming on the plantation of Mr. Matthew Fulghum in Glascock county, has achieved a success in farming, worthy of being put on record. With two mules he has made one hundred and twenty bushels of wheat, twenty-four bales of cotton, about three hundred bushels of corn, threshed out ninety-five bushels of oats, and has two cribs of sheaf oats on hand. He has about fifty head of hogs, eleven for killing this winter. He always, as we learn, makes corn and meat enough to do him, and as a natural consequence, has ample credit with the merchants.

How the Farmers of New Jersey Grow Sweet Potatoes—The Profit?

VINELAND, N. J., December 2.—From seven hundred hills planted between rows of bushes on land enriched for raspberries, Mr. S. H. Sargent has just harvested twenty-one barrels of sweet potatoes of excellent quality. The specimens shown average from two and a half to four pounds, a few even running up to six pounds. One such, served whole, will furnish a good accompaniment for a roast pig for thanksgiving dinner; or if preferred, it can be split with a hatchet and cooked in sections. The yield this year has been excellent, from 80 to 100 barrels to the acre, several growers having taken very nearly 3,000 bushels each out of these "Jersey barrens." But shipments have been light, producers holding their crop for better prices. A few have marketed their entire raising direct from the field, either to shippers or to dealers for the home trade; but thousands of barrels are in store in cellars and root-houses. Owing to the sweet potatoes' perishable nature and extreme liability to chill great precautions must be observed, not only in gathering and handling, but in housing them. Several parties, aside from the great number who have private cellars, make a specialty of taking them on storage at the rate of twenty-five cents a barrel delivered, keeping them in rooms that are dry, well ventilated, and regulated by stove or furnace heat to a temperature of about sixty-five degrees. During the winter the farmers watch "Old Probabilities" closely, and whenever a mild spell is predicted, they are ready to take advantage of it, and have their teams out early and late delivering their preserved sweets to the shippers, or at the depot to be sent to all the great distributing markets. Shipping business is an important industry. The efficient shipper keeps the producer thoroughly informed by daily telegrams from different sections as to the market price, and must be always ready to place his consignments where they will sell to the best advantage.

THE STANDARD POTATOES.

With proper care potatoes can be kept until the first of June in good condition. The standard varieties are the yellow and red Nansemond, red and white Bermudas and Southern Queen. They are sorted in primes, seconds and culls, and put into barrels, trays, crates or bins, constructed in the cellar. When a field ripens—which is some time in September—the vines are cut close and carried off, and the harvesting done by deep plowing. They must then be stored at once before the sun wilts them. On going into the cellar they steam for a while and shrink considerably, after which they are in condition to keep all winter without further handling. Mr. A. P. Arnold, who has in storage about eighteen hundred bushels of his own raising, for which he hopes to realize good returns next spring, has a novel contrivance for economizing labor. He gathers his crops from the field in trays, holding a bushel each, and which he manufactures from Jersey pine at a cost of ten cents apiece. A narrow, ladder-like arrangement, set with wooden rungs, leads from the entrance well down into the middle of the cellar. The trays are unloaded at an outside platform and pass swiftly and smoothly over this inclined carrier from end to end, when they are taken off and ranged closely in tiers from floor to ceiling. The projecting car at each end of the tray affords easy means of handling, and serves to keep them far enough separated to allow free circulation of air between the tiers. They bear strong resemblance to the old-fashioned wooden baby-cradles that our grandmothers rocked their babies in, only needing a coat of red paint and rockers to render the likeness complete. Mr. Arnold has seven hundred of these trays, filled, in his cellar; the remainder of his crop is in bins of from two hundred to two hundred and fifty bushels capacity.

Mr. S. T. Ellis stores his potatoes in barrels ranged in high tiers with alleys between the rows and in crates. He makes a specialty of fine seed potatoes of all varieties. These are sorted out with care from the seconds and stored by themselves to await planting time. The culls he keeps for feeding.

PROFITS ON AN ACRE OF SWEETS.

From a statement furnished by him of the profit per acre from the first sweet potato crop, raised with only ordinary care, on land cleared in 1868, the following figures are taken:

Cost of land, per acre	$18 00
Clearing off timber	12 00
Stumping	30 00
Burning of stumps	5 00
Plowing	5 00
Preparing land for plants	10 00
Manure	25 00
Drawing manure	5 00
Plants	10 00
Setting plants	5 00
Cultivation	5 00
Digging	10 00
Total	$140 00
Marketable potatoes raised on one acre, two hundred bushels, sold at $1 00	$200 00
Thirteen bushels seed potatoes sold in spring at $2 00	25 00
Amount received	$226 00
Cost	140 00
Net profits	[illegible]86 00

In one respect sweet potato growing is unreliable. When a sprout is stuck in … there is no certainty as to what … it will bring for…

WORSTED STATESMEN.

QUARRELING OVER WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN.

Pendleton's Civil Service Resolutions Called For By the Republicans, and Antagonized By the Democrats—The Late River and Harbor Bill in Both Houses—Beck's Resolutions.

WASHINGTON, December 9.—In the senate resolutions of tobacco dealers and manufacturers for a rebate equal to any reduction that may be made in the tax on tobacco, were presented by Messrs Hale, Miller, of New York, and Edmunds. Mr. Hoar asked Mr. Pendleton when he intended to call up his civil service bill. Mr. Penldeton, in reply, asked unanimous consent to take up the bill for the purpose of making it the special order for Monday next. Mr. Voorhees said there were so many more important measures awaiting the action of the senate that he was compelled to object. Mr. Pendleton said as soon as the bankruptcy bill was disposed of he would move to take up the civil service bill. Mr. Vance offered a resolution, which was agreed to, directing the secretary of the treasury to furnish as soon as possible, a detailed statement showing the cost of collecting internal revenue in each collection district, the number of employes in each district, and the percentage of cost upon the sums collected in each district. The president submitted a communnication from the secretary of war, transmitting in compliance with a resolution adopted on motion of Mr. Jones, the estimate of the Mississippi river commission for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1884. The discussion of the question of reference of this communication to the commerce committee or the Mississippi river committee, brought on a renewal of the debate on the river and harbor bill of the last session, the point of attack being the use of public money to construct and repair the Mississippi levees. Pending the discussion, at the close of the morning hour Mr. Beck called up his resolution for an investigation of political assessments. Mr. Voorhees addressed the senate congratulating the country on the wonderful change of heart on the subject among the republican senators since the discussion last summer. In the course of the discussion Mr. Hale read a circular calling a meeting of the liquor dealers of Dayton, Ohio, to aid in defeating "the fanatics and prohibitionists," and said he wished the investigating committee to summon Edward Cooper, and ask him how much money the democratic committee in New York collected from the liquor dealers there. At 2 o'clock, without acting on Mr. Beck's resolution, the senate resumed consideration of the unfinished business, the bankruptcy bill.

Mr. Hoar continued his speech in advocacy of the Lowell bill, and when he concluded Mr. Brown said he had listened to the speeches of Messrs. Ingalls and Hoar, and each had succeeded in convincing him that the bill of the other was wrong. He thought before devoting more time to the discussion of details, it would be well to ascertain whether the senate was of opinion that any bankruptcy law was required. He therefore moved to indefinitely postpone the subject. After some discussion it was agreed to dispose of the bill on Monday. Mr. Hawley introduced a bill to prevent officers of the United States from collecting subscriptions or assessments from each other; referred to the civil service reform committee. The bill is a complete omnibus bill in its enumeration of the parties embraced in its prohibition and of the methods of assessment and collection which are prohibited. No person of high or low degree receiving compensation from the public treasury for any service whatever, is permitted, under this bill, to pay to, or to receive from, another public servant money for political purposes, and an infraction of this law is made a misdemeanor, punishable by a maximum fine of $5,000, or a maximum imprisonment of three years, or both, at the discretion of the court. After a brief executive session the senate adjourned.

IN THE HOUSE.

In the house, Mr. Page, of California, chairman of the committee on commerce, reported a resolution calling on the secretary of war for information as to whether any moneys appropriated by the last river and harbor bill were appropriated for work, or objects that are not in the interest of and do not benefit commerce and navigation, and if so, the names of such works and objects, and the respective amounts so appropriated; whether any of the money has been used on works not in the interest of commerce and navigation, and if so, the names of such works; whether the expenditure of any money authorized by that act has been withheld or stopped, and if so how much and for what cause, the amount likely to be on hand at the close of the current fiscal year, and how much of such balance comprises money which has been carried over from year to year from non-compliance with the conditions of law making such appropriations, and to furnish estimates of the engineer department for the year 1884, which have not been transmitted to the secretary of the treasury in conformity with section 3669 of the revised statutes. his resolution at once plunged the house into a heated and exciting debate on the river and harbor bill, which was an exaggerated counterpart of the debate progressing in the senate at the same time. Mr McLane, of Maryland and Mr. Robeson, of New Jersey, made strong speeches in favor of that bill. Mr. Robson attributing the opposition to it from the metropolitan newspapers as being in the interest of the aggregated capital employed in railroads. Messrs Cox and Kasson renewed their opposition to the bill, and the members of the house surrounded the speakers and several times interrupted them with laughter and applause. The house finally adopted the resolution, and after the introduction and reference of bills (to promote telegraphic communication with Europe,) and appropriating $1,250,000 for the purchase of real estate in New York city for custom purposes, at 1:40 proceeded to consideration of the consular appropriation bill, which was passed and the house adjourned.

PARALYZING FUTURE DEALERS.

Senator Morgan's amendment to the bankruptcy bill, which was adopted last evening, makes certain additions to the list of acts already enumerated in the bill which constitutes the grouud for instituting bankruptcy proceedings. The text of the amendment is as follows: "Or shall, after the passage of the act, sell or agree to sell for delivery at a future time any stocks, bond, or other securities, or any grain, food, provisions, provender, or cotton, sugar, salt or tobacco, without being at the time of making such contract, the owner or assignee or the trustee of the property sold or agreed to be sold, or the authorized owner of such owner, assignee or trustee." In connection with the amendment Mr. Morgan said: "The substance of this amendment I have taken from the statutes of Massachusetts, where one of the honorable senators from that state has informed me by a mere declaration of nullity of such contracts, has had the effect of suppressing the evil within that state. I congratulate Massachusetts on her success. I wish that the same law had been passed by my own state three years ago, so that in an interior city in the state of Alabama six hundred thousand dollars would have been saved to some of the very best people in that city, its wives and children, which were squandered in a single season in betting on futures in cotton."

NOMINATIONS.

The president to day made the following nominations for postmasters; W. F. Slater, Wytheville, Virginia; Samuel M. Yost, Staunton, Virginia; James H. Ramsey, Salisbury, North Carolina; John C. Ball, LaGrange, Ga.; William M. Ledwith, Jacksonville, Florida; Thomas J. Lake, Athens, Ala.; Clayton McMi[illegible]nnsylvania, to be marshall of the [illegible] District

AT THE CAPITAL.

The Works and Ways of Washington Life—The Nicaragua Canal, Etc.

WASHINGTON, December 9.—Congressman Blount, of Georgia, who was granted sixty days at the close of last session by the house in which to make a minority report upon the bill to incorporate the Nicaragua canal, says there are many reasons why congress should not guarantee the interest on the immense amount of bonds which the company asks as the basis for beginning operations. He meets the argument urged by the projectors of the canal that we need a shorter route by water from New York to San Francisco with the counter-argument that the Panama canal is already being built, and the beginning of another at Nicaragua would not stop the operations of Le Lesseps, and that one canal is enough. The strong point made in the majority report, that for political reasons and the protection of American supremacy the United States should appear as the sponsor and protector of the Interoceanic Canal company, is answered by Mr. Blount by the statement that the canal would be controlled eventually by its stockholders. There is nothing to hinder the citizens of any country from buying a majority of all stock when placed upon the market, and investors then would look to their own governments for the protection of their interests, as capitalists, and such guardianship would naturally be granted. It then would make no difference as to what government would guarantee in the beginning the interest of the bonds, that government would control the canal whose citizens had the largest amount of capital invested in its stock. Mr. Blount also finds some technical objections to the construction and provisions of the bill.

THE ILLINOIS SENATORSHIP.

WASHINGTON, December 9.—Commissioner Raum will start for Illinois Saturday night, and may not return until after the legislature shall have decided upon the successor to David Davis. It is believed in Washington that General Raum's chances for success are very flattering, although his personal popularity here, where he is one of the most efficient as well as valuable officers of the government, may have more to do with creating the impression than any positive information upon the subject. Leading citizens of the state of Illinois, who from time to time appear at the capital, have uniformly said, when asked, that nothing was known about the matter yet, and that it was impossible to tell what would be the outcome of the contest. It has generally been considered, however, that Governor Cullom would have more votes than any other candidate at the start. General Hamilton, who is lieutenant governor of the state, is reported now to be a bona fide candidate, although at first it was generally understood that his strength would be for Cullom, and that he was not actually in the field in his own behalf. Ex-Senator Oglesby's strength is an unknown quantity, but there are many who believe that in the end he will be chosen. Some politicians from the southern part of the state express the opinion that the Hon. John I. Rinaker, who was a candidate for governor in 1880, will have more adherents than has been supposed, and while not being able to secure his own election, may have followers enough to give some one else a great deal of trouble.

COMMERCIAL TREATY WITH MEXICO.

WASHINGTON, December 9.—Although four months have elapsed since General Grant and Mr. Trescott were appointed commissioners to negotiate a commercial treaty with Mexico, no step, so far as known, have been taken toward opening negotiations. The reason is that Mexico has not appointed any commissioners to meet the American commissioners. Grave doubts have been expressed whether Mexico would appoint commissioners. Some days ago a prominent diplomat, well acquainted with Mexican affairs, said that the Mexican government did not dare to appoint commissioners on account of the violent opposition of Mexican newspapers and Mexican manufacturers to the propo[illegible] Maxey, of Texas, wh[illegible] informed man [illegible] pertaining [illegible] had he [illegible] would appoint [illegible] possible that instructions would be given them which would make a commercial treaty impossible. The higher classes of Mexicans, he said, are always faithful to engagements and would fulfill any obligation they had imposed upon themselves. According to Senator Maxey, therefore, there is every probability that in the course of time negotiations for the proposed treaty will be entered upon, but it is not absolutely certain that they will lead to anything definite.

HOLMAN'S CANDIDACY.

WASHINGTON, December 9.—Holman, of Indiana, has branched out as a candidate for the speakership of the next house. It is said that his own delegation will support him. It is not believed, however, that he will muster strength enough to be a dangerous or even formidable rival of Carlisle, who will practically poll the democratic strength of the western and southern states. If the democrats of the present house were to choose the speaker instead of the next, Carlisle would be elected over Randall by a vote of two to one. The large proportion of new men in the next house, and especially of members who have never heretofore been in public life, makes the result of the contest more uncertain than it otherwise would be, and a good many members are of the opinion that when the forty eighth congress finally meets it will be found that other members not now mentioned may have some strength for the speakership, and that it is not at all certain that either Randall or Carlisle will be the successful man.

THE EFFORT TO KILL BECK'S RESOLUTION.

WASHINGTON, December 9.—The republicans do not intend to have any investigation of the amount of their campaign fund, or the manner in which it was raised, or the way in which it was spent. Senator Hale offered a substitute to-day for Senator Beck's resolution, calling for an investigation of Hubbell's collection business, which is intended to hush up the whole matter. Hale's resolution looks to finding out how much money the democrats got from the whisky men and others. Of course the folly of hunting up and questioning all who contribute anything to the democratic campaign fund, what little there was of it, is apparent. The whisky men are not office holders, and there is no objection to their giving money for political purposes if they want to. No law was broken, but in assessing government clerks, as the republicans did, the law was violated.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENTS.

WASHINGTON, December 9.—In reply to the resolution of Senator Jones calling upon the secretary of war for the estimates of the Mississippi river commission, the estimates were to-day transmitted to the senate. They aggregate $4,573,000. This sum is proposed to be expended in narrowing the canal and protecting the caving banks on the six reaches below Cairo, as follows: New Madrid reach 40 miles, Plum Point reach 30 miles, Memphis reach 16 miles, Helena reach 30 miles, Proctaw Bend reach 35 miles, Lake Providence reach 30 miles, and for improving the harbors at Vicksburg, Natchez and New Orleans, for making a lock at Bayou Plaquemmine, the rectification of Red and Archafalaga rivers, and for the closing of crevasses and outlets as auxiliaries to the channel improvements.

HOW M'PHERSON DIVIDES THE NEXT HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, December 9.—McPherson, clerk of the house, to-day made an estimate of the strength of the respective parties in the next house. According to his figures the democrats will have 191, the republicans 121, the readjusters 6, the indopendents 3 and the independent republicans 2.

The Tobacco Tax.

Special to the Constitution.

LOUISVILLE, December 9.—The tobacco trade of Louisville, the greatest tobacco market in the world, met to-day and prepared a statement which will be forwarded to congress at once, asking for the repeal of the tobacco tax and immediate action.

BUZZ AND BOUNCE.

THE GOSSIP THEY HEAR IN NEW YORK.

Spicy Talks and Bright Anecdotes of the Men and Things Past and Present in the Metropolis of the New World—The Latest Railroad Gossip—Theatrical Notes, Etc.

Special to the Constitution.

NEW YORK, December 7.—The old Louisville and Nashville crowd, which was the sensation of the street two years ago, has gone to pieces in a huff. Newcomb, Baldwin and Clark, the three inseparables, are at daggers points, and rumors of a hostile meeting between Newcomb and Baldwin were afloat a short time since. Newcomb and both the Clarks are out of the directory, but Baldwin has the presidency safe with E. H. Green and Mrs. Green at his back. Ugly stories are circulated concerning the road, and every time the stock shows its head somebody hits it between the eyes. Baldwin has the nerve of the devil and has shovelled in a clean million and a half in the campaign, the scars of which are just now healing on his lean body, and he will hold on to the last. The story was that one of the links of their system, from Mobile to New Orleans I believe, has been captured by a rival corporation, but this is doubtful. The great system of roads blocked together with such startling rapidity three winters ago will probably cohere, simply because they can't let go.

In the meantime Standiford, the old president, who was ousted by Newcomb, after he had drank heavily and become dizzy, returned from his stock-farm, where he retired for rest, to take the presidency of a bank, and later of the New Albany and Chicago road, is the picture of health and prosperity, having built up both his enterprises and steadied his habits. Newcomb, having unloaded his stock at enormous profits, resigned the presidency and sold the stock short, on his knowledge of its affairs, and raked in a fortune or so on the down turn. He is now a chuffy bank president in this city, owns his bank, and is a club man, a patron of the arts and an amateur politician, with a fortune of anywhere between ten and twenty millions. There doesn't seem to be much confidence in the come-out of the Louisville and Nashville stock.

All the "southern fancies" in which huge fortunes have been lately made and lost, seem to be sick.

The campaign engineered by the Richmond crowd that came up and ran the Danville stocks up so high that "privileges" of taking stock in their new schemes commanded from 60 to 160 premium, was the most brilliant of the past decade while it lasted. When the old foxes of the street thought it had gone far enough, they sprang on it and it tumbled 90 points in a day. It is said that the fall impoverished most of the officers of the road, just as the rise had enriched them. It is now believed that Mahone, of Virginia, will be elected president of the line, in return for privileges asked from the readjuster courts and legislature. The system is considered the most promising in the south, and its managers as bright men, but just now the whole thing seems to be carrying a black eye.

The Memphis and Charleston pool is also sick. The crowd that operates through the Baxters in Nashville, Jamison & Co. in Philadelphia, and Stevenson in New York have control, but the stock that was to go to par staggers below 50. It is said that little of the stock is offered at anything under 75 as the big holders believe in the earning capacity of the road and count it a sure 6 per cent stock.

The East Tennessee and Virginia stocks are quiet and droopy. The new roads of the system are just finished and investors are waiting to see the currents of trade established before they pitch in at fancy figures. The manipulators of this system having realized heavily on the sale of their nickel plated road, will now probably put their hands to the East Tennessee and Virginia stocks.

At present, however, the southern railroad stocks are heavy. They were "boomed" too furiously at first, and the values set too high. They will appreciate as the south develops slowly but more surely.

You have no idea how many private organs are built in houses here. The Messrs. Odell have just built two for William Belden. The first was an orchestra organ of immense power, which was placed in his country residence on City Island. It cost $7,500. Its peculiar feature is a high pressure cornet stop, for solo effects, which is frequently heard clearly in Long Island, two miles away across the water. For the second organ, to be erected in his residence at Fifth avenue and Sixty-second street. Mr. Belden gave the order: "Make me the best organ you know how, without regard to cost," and that the Messrs. Odell have just done. There are only one or two church organs in the city that are larger than this one, and even they have not some of its peculiar and most effective features. It has 58 stops and 2,500 pipes, a carillon, or chime, of 32 bells, military drums, and a solo cornet stop. That solo cornet is supplied with wind from a separate bellows of its own, is voiced at 10-inch pressure, whereas the usual voicing of a church organ is on 3-inch pressure, and in solo playing has exactly the effect of a cornet performed upon by Levy or Arbuckle. The "carillons" are not actually bells, but steel bars, and are operated by a separate piano action. This organ itself cost $15,000, but that was by no means the extent of the outlay on it. To afford a place for its erection, a place had to be provided 22 by 18 feet, running from the sub-cellar floor up to the second story of the house, a height of 33 feet. To give absolute security against dampness and its lower parts, which would be fatal to it in a short time, the sub-cellar and cellar had to be double and treble lined with concrete, asphaltum, and other materials. A steam engine of three-horse power was provided to work the bellows. Perfect connection was effected by the employment of the patient pneumatic system, which is the distinguishing feature of the Odell organs. The key-board was put in the first story in a recess back of the parlor. Looked at from the front there, only a large expanse of highly ornamental Queen Anne fretwork appears, on either side of which, at the depth of the recess, is a window. Before one of these windows is the board, and behind that fretwork are the carrilons and the solo organ, including that powerful cornet stop. A visitor might be in the house for a week, and, if the organ were not played in that time, or he did not chance to penetrate that recess, he would not be likely to suspect that there is an organ in the building. Messrs. Odell have also erected organs in the houses of Benjamin Gregory, 324 West Twenty-third street; Robert Thallon, 816 St. Mark's avenue, Brooklyn; M. Bowman, of St. Louis, and a number of others, but none of them at all approximating in size to that built for Mr. Belden's city residence.

Within the past week two new clubs have been organized here, one styling itself the Authors' club, and the other adopting the name "Stuyvesant club." The Authors' club will have quite a small membership. The limit is at present fixed at fifty, and that number, it seems, in the opinion of the members, will include all the book-writers in town of fair ability. Among the members are E. L. Godkin, George William Curtis, S. S. Conant, A. Thornkike Rice, R. W. Gilder, Richard Grant White, Edward Eggleston, E. C. Stedman, H. H. Boyesen, Noah Brooks, Charles DeKay, G. E. Montgomery, Bronson Howard, William Winter, J. Brander Matthews, H. M. Alden, W. L. Alden, and John Bigelow. Some literary men and editors who have been left out in the cold have been moved to make facetious remarks about the club in the daily papers. The Stuyvesant club will draw its members, for the most part, from the journalistic and theatrical professions. Club men generaly are talking about the need for new clubs in New York. The men about town and the newly rich are two classes that have been rapidly growing here, and all the clubs are besieged with applications for admission. The limit of me[illegible] has been reached in most of the leading clubs, and the crowds that are besieging the doors are rather embarrassing, to say the least. The Union League club has two thousand members, and at its last election of new members only three could be admitted out of over two hundred applicants. The Knickerbocker has not quite reached its limit, for the reason, doubtless, that it is the most expensive club in town. It costs $450 to get into it, in the first place. The initiation fee is $300, the annual dues are $100, and new members are assessed $50 each for the benefit of the building fund. It is no uncommon thing for gentlemen of moderate means to get into the other clubs, but wealth is a prerequisite in the Knickerbocker. Its card-room is famous for the heavy game of poker that is going on there every evening. Some time ago one of the younger members, who has an income of $75,000 per annum, dropped $3,000 of it at a single sitting in the club rooms. The Union club has been talking of buying land near Central park for the erection of a new club-house. It is now said that the scheme has been abandoned, as it was found that a desirable site could not be bought in the proposed location for less than about $75,000. Many members of the Union club are very wealthy, but the club itself is not particularly "forehanded," as it has always been its policy to live up to its income. It costs a good deal of money to belong to a fashionable club, but the advantages and comforts of club life are such as only the most opulent purses could provide for private enjoyment, and many men of good standing, but of really moderate means, are willing to pay the large initiation fee and the annual dues. It is esteemed also a great advantage to have a membership in a first-class club when one happens to visit London or the continent. The hospitalities of the leading clubs of London are freely extended to the members of the Union, the Union League, or the Knickerkocker, and a New York gentleman hardly needs any other introduction to the society of the British capital. The St. Nicholas club is in one sense the most exclusive in the city, inasmuch as it has an inexorable condition of member-hip as respects one's ancestry. It is wholly composed of the descendants of old New Yorkers, and no one is eligible to membership whose ancestors did not live in this city as far back as 1787. It is probable that one or two new clubs, organized on an ambitious plan, will be formed here soon to meet the demand.

THE most distressing news reaches us from the oil region. The number of people ruined in the late speculative crash there is unprecedented. Fortunes of a million dollars and trible that were swept away as feathers in a cyclone, thousands of people who enjoyed a competency one hour found themselves hopelessly bankrupt the next hour. Of course the Standard oil company made incredible profits. As it controlled the market, it made prices just what it pleased, dropping them when the lambs had bought, or shooting them up when the lambs had sold.

Rockafeller, who manages the affairs of this giant corporation, is one of the shrewdest men in the country He has in his time tackled Vanderbilt and Gould on the transportation question, and outwitted them both. There is no monopoly so secure and terrible as the oil company he has built up, and the fortunes amassed by its members are fabulous. I asked a friend of Rockafeller's what he was worth. The friend replied: "Rockafeller is one of the few men who would be afraid to tell just what he is worth. I should put his wealth at $10,000,000. He would probably put it at half as much." In the meantime the suicides that have been committed in the oil regions by wrecked investors, and the lunatics that have been crazed by their losses, cry out against Rockafeller and his friends. But these sort of cries rarely ever penetrate the gilded palaces of those against whom they are directed.

The Passion Play is now being rehearsed here for presentation soon. Rev. W. M. Wannemaker is to take the part of Christ. He says he was reformed from sin by seeing the Passion Play rendered in San Francisco, and has ever since studied the character of Christ so that he could render it reverently and intelligently. The play will be rendered in a new house called Passion Hall, now being built by Mr. Salmi Morse, who owns the play. The scenes, and elaborate ones they will be, represent the Garden of Gethesmane, the sabbatha where Christ was tried, the temple, and a great street scene in Jerusalem, 132 feet in depth. Mr. Morse says: "I do not intend in this production to give the scene of the crucifixion or any of the horrors in the tragedy of the life of Jesus, but only to depict, as man reverently and lovingly may, the meekness, the goodness, the greatness, attending that sublime subject. I mean to show contemporary matters and things of which little is known, except to students. I shall show the sedition of the Jews when Pontius Pilate placed the bust of Tiberius in the temple. I shall show the disastrous consequences of the battle of Aretas at the time of the death of John the Baptist. I shall give the plausible grounds of John the Baptist's decapitation. In nothing that I will do shall there be anything that might justly shock the prejudices or weaken the antagonism of the most devoted religionist."

The shop windows are assuming their holiday aspect, and they draw better than a pantomime. One of the windows at Macy's is given up to Mother Goose and a grand performance by all her characters. The piece is set in a large carved gilt frame, and by some unseen magical process revolves, each revolution turning out different scenes. First comes Mother Goose and her maids of honor. The fate of poor Jack and Gill is graphically personified by a little boy doll at the foot of a steep hill, laying flat on the ground with his head mashed and Gill tumbling after with her pail of water upset and the bucket rolling off at one side. One novelty in toys is an old white hen composed of real feathers and in life-size. When wound up she would run over the floor as if looking for corn on the ground, and deposit her eggs at intervals. She has a companion of the male persuasion composed of brilliant feathers, and displaying a very red comb as he struts around, crowing lustily every few steps.

Mrs. Langtry came very near meeting with failure in New York. Had her engagement been protracted a week longer, empty benches would have been the tale. As it was, there were many vacant seats the last few nights. The papers are fierce in their criticisms of her acting, and the most that people have cared for was to see the greatest beauty of our day. She does not show well in the rustic garb of Hester Grazebrook, nor the absurd leggins of Rosalind, and her audiences have little chance to judge of the witching beauty that in decollette dress and diamonds captured the prince of Wales at an evening party and made the lily the rage. In Boston she is doing well, as she always will to first nights. She had little or no social recognition here and has fallen in with a set of fast club men that drive even the doting Mrs. Labouchere from her side in alarm. With an income of more than $1,000 a night, Mrs. Langtry doesn't care for a chaperone.

OPELIKA'S BATTLE.

MR. R. M. MALONEY FATALLY SHOT IN THE ROW.

A Struggle With a Policeman in Which His Baton is Wrested From Him—Ta- Musketry Engagement—Hot Lead Whizzing Down the Streets—The Wounded and Dying.

Special to The Constitution.

OPELIKA, Ala., December 9.—The battle has been renewed all along the line. Every doctor in the city is engaged in extracting buckshot from the bodies of the wounded; and Mr. Maloney lies dangerously and, it is feared, mortally wounded. How came it? Well, I will get at it as directly as can be expected from one who is under the wrath of the lord of "the little brown jug" and the mayor of Opelika. It will be remembered that the big riot several weeks ago was occasioned by the wanton assault of several policemen upon Mr. J. D. Roberts, bar-keeper for Mr R. M. Maloney. In the melee Roberts was pretty well riddled with bird-shot, but finally escaped under fire of five double-barreled guns, sent whizzing after him from Dunbar's groggery. Ever since both parties have been quietly preparing for another meeting, and yesterday evening the trouble was renewed with greater ferocity than ever.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

At about 5 o'clock, Policeman Osborne and Mr. R. H. Love got into a personal altercation on the corner of Tallapoosa and South Railroad streets. Osborne fell under Love, and the latter, aided by the presence of his brother and Mr. J. D. Roberts, the hero of the previous difficulty, wrenched the policeman's baton from him and bore it off in triumph. The three then proceeded up South Railroad street, and when at the door of Maloney's saloon, their attention was attracted by noises behind them. Turning, they stood face to face with Marshal Hart, Policeman Osborne and William Macon, a clerk in Dunbar's saloon, who were standing in line in front of Dunbar's, armed with shot guns. A quick volley from the Dunbar party elicited one as quick from the Roberts' party, and several rounds were interchanged. Roberts and the Love's were hit in the face, but not seriously. The policemen then took to cover, and for a while there was a lull in the proceedings.

CASUALTIES ON THE STREET.

While this cross-firing was in progress, the streets were filled with people, who, not expecting the difficulty, did not have time to find places of safety. A negro who was walking off in the opposite direction received a full charge of buckshot in the back, and putting his hand quickly behind him exclaimed: "Golly, wat's all dis about?" Mr. Williams, clerk of Wilford & Cooper, was painfully hurt in the face. Mr. J. C. Barnes, who was standing in front of Wilford & Cooper's, was slightly hit in the forehead, and carried a peck of shot in his clothes. Mr. T. J. Williamson was hit in the face. Mr. Toombs Kyle and his clerk Mr. Vaughn were hit, as was also Mr. Oliver, clerk for N. L. Wright. A countryman, whose name I did not learn, was seriously wounded, and did not have time to stay in town to answer unnecessary questions.

THE ASSAULT ON MALONEY.

Consequent upon this disturbance, excitement ran high, and liquor was in good demand. At about eight o'clock Will Bond went into Maloney's Railroad street house, and was very boisterous and abusive, when Maloney found it necessary to eject him, in doing which Bond alleges that he was slapped by Maloney. Procuring a pistol Bond returned to the scene, and taking aim at Maloney, without a word of warning, shot him in the left breast. Maloney fell with what was probably a mortal wound, and was at once conveyed to his room, where he was put under medical treatment, and throughout the night he lay between life and death.

BOND'S ARREST AND ESCAPE.

W. C. Bond, who is a clerk for Mr G. W. Fuller, was arrested this morning by the sheriff. A bright and left for a few minutes in custody of the sheriff's son, an exceedingly bright youth. The prisoner got permission of his guard to step out the back door and see a man, and to this hour the vigilant deputy sheriff has not seen his charge. A posse was at once put in pursuit of Bond, but it is doubtful if he can be found, for his friends will hide him out, and the officers are so carried away by the prejudices of the situation that but little can be expected from them. Bond boasted during the night that he was a Dunbar man.

THE WOUNDED MAN.

The wound received by Maloney, was in his left breast, and was pronounced by his physician to be very dangerous, though not necessarily fatal. During the night there were many inquiries after his condition, a notable fact being that every man who called, either carried a shot gun or an exposed pistol. This morning the sufferer was lying very low, and telegrams were sent his friends expressing fears for the worst. In answer to these, Mr. William M. Scott, of Atlanta, came here at once, and is now with Maloney. Later in the evening, Maloney's condition was somewhat more hopeful, but he is in a very critical condition.

A TALK WITH MALONEY.

When I was in Opelika some weeks ago, I met Maloney. He was running two bar-rooms, one on South Railroad street, and one on Chambers street. The latter was formerly owned by Neil Hudman, brother of ex-Mayor W. E. Hudman, and was run for Maloney by J. D. Roberts, who has figured so extensively and somewhat aggressively in the two tragedies that have taken place. Maloney was formerly a citizen of Atlanta, where he run the exposition bar-room during the cotton exposition, and he has many friends there, as well as a sister, Mrs. Thibadeau. Maloney's railroad street barroom is only a few doors from Dunbar's, so that there was a business rivalry between them. Maloney imported a good many Atlanta customs, and as a consequence drew off a large part of Dunbar's trade, "the decent drinkers of the city," as he said. Some time ago Maloney applied to the city council for permission to lay a crossing, at his own expense, from his place of business to the depot. Through the antagonism of the mayor, as Maloney alleges, the permission was refused. "During the Thursday riot an attempt was made to assassinate a number of persons in my bar room," said Maloney. "Several shots were fired in the back yard; as I stepped back to see what was the matter a friend of mine came rushing in, exclaiming: 'Maloney, don't go out there, or you are a dead man.' I then bolted the door, and we got our guns out, loaded and primed, and waited for the attack. I subsequently learned that a lot of Dunbar men were hidden in the back yard, and were ready to shoot us down as we stepped out." "What are you going to do if this thing continues?" said I. "We will organize a vigilance committte," he said quickly. "I've been in the west, and their way of dealing with such difficulties as this is the best." But poor Maloney let them creep up on him at last.

THE SITUATION.

The scenes of last night are likely to be repeated at any moment. It only requires a little whisky to turn the brain, and at once a city of three thousand inhabitants is at the mercy of as merciless a mob as ever pulled a trigger. The Christmas holidays will bring into the city crowds from the country, and scenes which are disagreeable enough in the best regulated towns will, in Opelika, suggest pandemonium itself. The citizens, who should be conservative, are under the ban of the authorities, and without influence or organization. The mayor, whose duty it should be to preserve order and punish crime, is dependent upon selling liquor by the drink for his living, and to arrest these brawling disturbers, is to arrest his own customers. In such a state of affairs we can only look for the spilling of blood, and more of that may be looked for in the future, unless arrested by some higher authority than the officials of Opelika, or Lee county.

A Cry For Papa.

NEW YORK, December 9.—The wife of Wm. Cottrell, of Ocean Beach, New Jersey, eloped on Wednesday of last week, with a man named McLaughlin. She took with her her boy. Cottrell arrived in Jersey City yesterday. While proceeding up Montgomery street, he was startled with the familiar cry of "papa." In a moment his little boy was in his arms. His mission had ended. All he wanted was the child, and the happy parent started with his son in the direction of the railroad depot to take him home. Detective Rowe had witnessed the meeting between the father and son, and he intercepted the parent, whose story he learned, and compelled him to wait until he made inquiries. Mrs. Cottrell was found, and willingly parted with the boy.

Two More Seats for the Democrats.

DES MOINES, Ia., December 9.—Judge McHenry, in the district court this morning, issued an injunction to the state canvassing board, forbidding them to count the vote of Taylor precinct, Mahaska county. If they obey the writ it will seat Fredericks, democrat, in the next congress. The board has submitted the question of the legality of the injunction to the attorney general.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., December 9.—The supreme court has issued a peremptory writ, ordering the registers to count the two disputed precincts in the ninth district. This elects James O. Broadhead to congress for the uninth district, and defeats McLean republican.

A Clerk Murdered.

MEMPHIS, December 9.—Before daylight yesterday morning, two masked men went to the store of J. G. James, at Sharkey, Miss., and aroused the clerk, who was sleeping in the store, saying they wanted medicine. As the clerk opened the door the men rushed in, and fired four shots, one of which struck the clerk from the effects of which he died in three hours. The masked men demanded the keys of the safe but left without taking anything.

The Macon Mayoralty.

DECATUR, December 9.—Mention was made in your paper a few days ago, that an effort was being made by certain republicans to have H. J. Williams, postmaster at this place, removed and Robt. M. Brown, Jr., appointed. It is said that Mr. Brown received his papers last Tuesday, but as Mr. Williams is still in charge of the office and has heard nothing regarding his removal it is likely to suppose the statement was premature. The petition favoring Mr. Brown's appointment was short and formal and merely recommended him as being qualified for the position, and was signed by John M. Hawkins, Moses L. Brown, George W. Webb, Sr., A. A. Campbell, William L. Shumate and Robert W. Alston, white; and William Fannin, William Jordan, Thomas Terrell and Giler Reed, colored. Neither of the colored men can read or write. We further learn that letters have been written to the department by James E. Bryant, chairman, and W. H. Johnson, secretary state republican executive committee, William L. Shumate, Register clerk in Atlanta post-office and A. A. Campbell, republican supervisor of election at Decatur precinct in the last congressional election asking the removal of Mr. Williams as postmaster at Decatur, because he voted for Hon. Thomas Hardeman and N. J. Hammond in the last congressional election, and is a "bourbon democrat," and the appointment of Robt. M. Brown, Jr., because "he is a good republican." Mr. Williams is not a politician, and while it is true he is a democrat, and has always voted a democratic ticket, he has been extremely liberal in his political opinions, which fact is well known to everyone who knows anything about his politics, and that Mr. Brown has always claimed to be a democrat, and in a democratic primary election held in this county last September to nominate candidates for representatives, in which no one but "known democrats" were allowed to participate, Mr. Brown voted, and in the election in October he favored the election of Hon. A. H. Stephens, while his father and two brothers were strong, uncompromising supporters of General Gartrell, and in the same election he refused to vote for Robert W. Alston, independent candidate for representatives, who was his personal friend and relative of his father's family, because he felt honor bound to support the nominees if he voted. 'I STILL LIVE'

The Anger of a Hart County Texan Who Was Reported to Have Been Lynched.

From the Hartwell, Ga., Sun.

Death alive! what sweet slaughtering,
And cutting and scars
Is it honor you'd seek, wouldn't you
Go to the wars?
Where death bathes his long scythe
In gore to the hilt,
And whips heads from shoulders so clever,
And where, should you have
The good luck to be kilt,
By my soul, you'd be living for ever.

TEXAS, November 23d, 1882.—Editor Sun: Will you please to give me place in your valuable columns for a few words in vindication against a report I have read in your paper sent me from home. Sir, it was stated in your journal that I was lynched in Taxas. Now, sir, I speak to you by the pen from a living tomb. Whoever was capable of framing such a falsehood is a worthy accomplice of Judas Iscariot. Judas made thirty pieces of silver. I doubt whether he made as much—if he did. I know he would not throw them away. The low, villifying rascal, liar, and contemptible whelp, that thought to color my character before the community from whence I came. The paving stones of hell will be hot with his equals on the first day of sale when the great opening is heralded by the sounds of the trumpet. My vocabulary of the English language is insufficient to express my contempt for the filthy suckling that took such liberty with my name when a thousand miles away. The illiterate lump of dirt must have had no better object in view than to distress, disturb, and discourage an unprotected wife and mother in the absence of her natural protector. I came here a stranger among strangers, and I never had more or better friends than I have in this community.

For God knows I would a friend befriend,
And follow him to the bitter end.
And there I would his cause defend—
Perish there or die.

But when I left a found wife and sweet and loving children to make a living when and where I could find it, I think it adding fuel to fire to follow me with filthy epithets through the public press.

Mr. Wilson and I had some trouble. I shot him in self defense, but did not kill him; and no man blamed me for it. I am alive and well. That rope was never spun to be a necktie for me. When my time comes I am not afraid to die. I stood on too many southern fields when bullets poured like hail to be now afraid of a single shell. But yet, hoping in heaven once more to see the only one on earth that I love, my far away wife,

The sailor's home is on the main,
The warrior's on the tented plain;
But where through art is home to me?
And home without thee cannot be.

THE SMELL OF POSSUM.

A Columbus Negro Girl Burns Her New-Born Babe to Death.

From the Columbus, Ga., Times.

Tuesday morning Georgia Reed, colored, called on a negro girl named Phenny Grant, living on the lot of Mr. James Renfroe. When she entered the room Phenny seemed very nervous and appeared anxious to get rid of her and keep her away from the fire, but Georgia's olfactories had inhaled the horrid smell of burning flesh. Pushing by the girl she approached the fire in which she saw a mass of frying, burning flesh. Turning to Phenny, she asked, "What dis in de fire, er possum?" Taking the poker she drew from the embers the charred remains of a new born child. For some time it has been apparent that the girl was enciente, but what time Tuesday the child was born, and whether it was born dead or alive is only known to the inhuman creature and her God. The negroes say that her brother, Evans Grant, who lives with her, is the father of the child, and it was for that reason she desired to destroy it.

A FIRE IN SPARTANBURG.

The Piedmont Female Seminary Burned to the Ground.

SPARTANBURG, December 9.—At one o'clock Thursday the Piedmont seminary of this city, a large three story wooden building, was discovered to be on fire. The flames were first seen bursting from the roof over one of the rooms of the third story, in which room there was a defective stove pipe, supposed to have been the cause of the fire. The flames raged steadily for three hours, reducing the whole structure to the ground. The fire engine was promptly on hand but could do little. All the furniture was saved except the school desks, which were completely destroyed. The building was owned by private parties and was well insured.

Burned to Death.

From the Newnan, Ga., Herald.

A little four year-old girl of Mr. Henry Haynes unfortunately got severely burned last Monday, and after great suffering died the same day. Mr. Haynes lives on Mr. Lang Moore's farm and it seems that the child's clothing caught from a brush fire in the cotton field.

The remains were laid away in our cemetery the following day, Rev. J. H. Hall, officiating at the grave.

SWEET AND JUICY.

From the Dooly County, Ga., Vindicator.

Mr. Gus Jordan brought to our office yesterday a stalk of cane eight and a half feet in length, having twenty-five joints. It is simply a giant of its species. Talk about your long sweetning, this is the longest we ever saw. Mr. Jordan has our thanks.

From the Montezuma, Ga., Weekly.

Mr. W. R. Walters, living a few miles from town, made 14 gallons of syrup on one-twelfth of an acre, the best yield yet heard of.

From the Oglethorpe, Ga., Echo.

Our farmers, at least some of them, intend next year to plant the ribbon cane instead of sorghum, which will be accompanied with no little trouble and expense, as the stalk itself has to be planted instead of seed. It will, however, amply pay them when once they get a start, there being no comparison between the syrups from the two varieties.

From the Hamilton, Ga., Journal.

Last spring Mr. Ben H. Williams planted 500 stalks of cane. After saving 1,500 stalks for seed and feeding six boys for three months, he gathered enough from the batch to make 95 gallons of excellent syrup. Who can beat this?

From the LaGrange, Ga., Reporter.

Rev. F. M. T. Brannon, of Houston circuit, has sent the reporter a jug of fine syrup. It is a part of 68 and a half gallons made on one-eight of an acre.

From the Greenville, Ga., Vindicator.

Mr. Eli H. Blount had about one third of an acre, or 9 rows 120 yards long, in sugar cane this year. From this small patch he made 67 gallons of syrup, has sold $4.00 worth of cane for seed and has put away 1,700 stalks for next year's planting. This patch then has produced in round numbers $120 worth of cane and syrup, being at the rate of $360 per acre.

From the Dooly County, Ga., Vindicator.

Mr. Gilford Gunter a substantial farmer near Vienna has made this year, on four and a quarter acres 31 barrels Georgia cane syrup and two barrels sugar, besides reserving for seed about 8 000 stalks. One and a quarter acres of this crop were rattoons, the growth from last year's roots, not half so good as this year's planting. Mr. Gunter can realize at least 40 cents per gallon which makes it a much better paying crop than cotton.

From the Dooly County, Ga., Vindicator.

The amount of syrup made in this vicinity this season is immense, and as an evidence of it, there are not barrels enough in Dooly county to hold it. We heard a gentleman remark a few days since, that he would probably have to pour a part of his syrup on the ground, as he had sent to Hawkinsville and Montezuma, and been over the county himself after barrels, but could find none. This is becoming one of the most important crops of our section.

From the Dublin, Ga., Post.

When Mr George F. Graham was planting his cane last spring he noticed that one stalk still had a living top and instead of planting it, he set it out to see if it would take on another year's growth. This it did, but the second year's growth was a [...]ble effort. GEORGIA WOOL.

A MAGNIFICENT DEMONSTRATION IN COLUMBUS.

What Has Been Done By Columbus Manufacturers to Prove That There Are Fortunes in Wool, Both For Shepherds and Workers—The Value Of the Georgia Wool in Clip, Etc.

From the Columbus, Ga., Enquirer-Sun.

The Enquirer-Sun a few days ago took occasion to speak of wool manufacture in the south, and urged the importance of raising sheep. The Wesson Mississippi mills were spoken of to demonstrate the success to which woolen manufactories may attain, but it is useless to go so far from home when we have a wool manufactory in such successful operation at home. All the machinery for the manufacture of wool in this city is at the Eagle and Phenix mills, and there they have a capacity for manufacturing 800 yards per day. Yesterday a representative of this paper had a long chat with Mr. E. N. Clemence, who has the charge of the entire wool department of the mills, upon the subject of wool manufacturing generally, and about our own mills in particular. The mills have the most modern and improved machinery—and have seven sets, three cards to the set, 2,500 spindles and 132 looms for the purpose of making woolen goods. It takes about 125 operatives to run this department, and they make about 20,000 yards per week. The domestic supply of wool, by proper attention to sheep raising, could be made to furnish the mills with a sufficient supply for consumption, but it has not yet reached that point. Mr. Clemence says that all the wool that is brought to the mills find a ready sale and that the mills find that in order to obtain a supply equal to the demand they must go to foreign markets. The wool is brought from New Orleans, from Texas and from St. Louis, Missouri. The prices paid by them range from 18 to 32 cents for unwashed and from 35 to 60 cents per pound for washed wool. They get as fine Merino wool from St. Louis and Texas as there is in the United States at 60 cents per pound. They buy wool from merchants in the surrounding country, from farmers or from anyone who has it to sell. These mills manufacture fancy cassimeres, doeskins, some of which are as fine as any made in the United States. In some of these goods they put 150 picks to the inch. They manufacture very superior jeans, and their famous blue and yellow jeans find a very ready sale. They have recently sold over 500 pieces of these goods in New Jersey. They make a style of goods which they call planters' cassimeres, which are pulled and scoured, going through the same process that broadcloth does in the manufacture. Since the 10th of June they have sold 300 pieces of these goods, sending them to various parts of the United States. They are now 200 pieces behind in their orders for the academy jeans. In the manufacture of these goods a large variety of colors are used in the designs, and some of them very costly ones. They make woolen stripes for convicts, which they sell to six different states, and all their woolen goods have a fine reputation.

We have thus particularized in these goods in order to show that the manufacture of wool is no experiment, and to encourage sheep raising in the country, with the assurance that all the wool clipped will find ready sale at the home market. We have an abundance of labor that could be procured at much cheaper rates than in the northern states, and our climate is so mild that the mills would not be hindered in their operations by the severe cold from which the northern manufacturers suffer in the winter season. The manufacturers of the best qualities of woolen goods are obliged to keep the temperature of their mills up to at least eighty degrees, and in the higher latitudes the cost of fuel is by no means inconsiderable. Another benefit which would be derived from the establishment of woolen mills in the south is that large numbers of people who now have no certain means of support would be furnished with profitable employment. The wools grown in the south, and especially in the upper parts of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, are particularly adapted to the manufacture of jeans, cassimeres, blankets and stockinet, the quality of wools generally used in the manufacture of such goods being of a finer texture than the wools which are used in worsteds and some of the coarser woolen fabrics, for the manufacture of which the wools of California and imported wools are better adapted, being of a very coarse and "lofty" fibre. The northern mills now draw their main supply of wools from Iowa, California, Colorado, Texas and other western states and territories. The wools of North Carolina and Tennessee are generally of a finer grade and bring better prices, everything being equal, than the Colorado and Texas wools. The wools grown in a hilly and broken country are better than those produced in a low or prairie country, being of closer growth and finer quality. A million sheep of good varieties would yield seven million pounds of wool a year; a million sheep would be only one sheep per head for every man, woman and child in the state; a million sheep would add at least $1,700,000 to the taxable property of the state. The increase of our flocks would necessitate the establishment of woolen mills to work up the production of wool, and the construction of woolen mills would increase our population, diversify our industries, and increase our material prosperity to an incalculable extent.

DADE COUNTY MUSINGS.

An Editor Who Has Investigated the Marriage Problem.

From the Rising Fawn, Ga., Gazette.

The sparkers are looked upon by parents generally as a nuisance, and often they are right. Nine-tenths of the sparking is done by boys who have not got their growth, and they look so green that it is laughable for the old folks to look at them. They haven't generally a second shirt, and they are no more qualified to get married than a steer is to preach. And yet marrying is about the first thing they think of. A green boy without a dollar, present or prospective, sparking a girl regularly, and talking about marrying, is a spectacle for gods and men. He should be reasoned with, and if he will not quit it till he is able to support a wife, and to know whom he loves, and the difference between love and passion, he should be quarantined or put in a convent erected on purpose for such cases. Nine-tenths of the unhappy marriages are the result of green human calves being allowed to run at large in the society pastures without any yokes on them. They marry and have children before they do mustaches; they are fathers of twins before they are proprietors of two pairs of pants, and the little girls they marry are old women before they are twenty years old. Occasionally one of these gosling marriages turns out all right, but is a clear case of luck. If there was a law against young galoots sparking and marrying before they have all cut their teeth, we suppose the little cusses would evade it in some way, but there ought to be a sentiment against it. It is time enough for these bantams to think of finding a pullet when they have raised money enough to buy a bundle of laths to build a hen house. But they see a girl who looks cunning and they are afraid there is not going to be girls enough to go around, and then they begin to get in their work real spry; and before they are aware of the sanctity of the marriage relation they are hitched for life, and before they own a cook stove or a bedstead, they have to get up in the night and go after the doctor so frightened that they run themselves out of breath and abuse the doctor because he doesn't run too, and when the doc[tor] gets there there is not enough linen in the house to wrap up a doll baby.

It is about this time that a young man [...] that he is a colossal fool, and as he [...] to heat water and bring in the bath tub, and goes whooping after his mother or her mother, he turns pale around the gills, his hair turns red in a single night, and he calls high Heaven to witness that if he lives till morning, which he has doubts about, he will turn over a new leaf and never marry again till he is older. And in the morning the green looking "father" is aroused before a drug store is open, with no collar on, his hair sticking out all over, his eyes blood shot and his frame nervous, waiting for the clerk to open the door so than he can get some saffron to make tea of. Less than a year ago he thought he was the greatest man that there ever was anywhere, but as he sits there in the house that morning with his wedding coat rusty and shiny, and his pants frayed at the bottom, and his coat patched at the elbow, and the nurse puts in his arm a roll of flannel with a baby hid in it, he holds it as he would a banana, and as he looks at his girl wife on the bed, he thinks that there is not provisions enough in the house to feed a canary, a lump comes into his throat, and he says to himself that if he had it to do over he would leave that little girl at home to grow up with her mother, and he would wait till he had six dollars to buy flannel and ten dollars to pay a doctor. We ask some of our young friends in and around Rising Fawn to cut this out and put it in their hats.

A LIBERAL ACT.

Donation to Mercer University, of Macon, by Dr. Hood, of Columbus.

From the Columbus, Ga., Sun.

It has been whispered around for several days that Dr. E. C. Hood, of this city, had made a donation of one thousand dollars to Mercer university, the Baptist institution located at Macon, Georgia. Yesterday our reporter hunted up Rev. A. B. Campbell, agent for the university, to ascertain the truth of the rumors. "Yes," said Mr. Campbell, "it is a fact. Dr. Hood, our big-hearted townsman, has crowned the many noble deeds of his life with a donation of $1,000 to the endowment of Mercer." "What will you do with it?" asked the reporter. "This money," said he, "goes to endow a perpetual scholarship in the university, the proceeds of the investment to be used in paying the tuition of worthy poor young men from year to year in the future history of the institution." "But how will you invest the money?" "I cant say as to that. Dr. Hood has the privilege of saying in what way it shall be invested, as this is something we concede the right of every one donating to the endowment fund, but he preferred not to do so. He had rather leave it with the board of trustees and let them invest it in whatever way they deem best for the institution." This is a generous deed upon the part of Dr. Hood, and is worthy of emulation.

SAM AS A HORSE FARMER.

The Nubbins as an Inducement to a Refractory Mare.

From the Irwinton, Ga., Appeal.

Our old colored friend Sam Ross, besides being a successful 'possum hunter and well digger, has an original style of herding unmanagable horses unknown to few and practiced by no one but Sam alone. For the benefit of the curious we will try to state the modus operandi of Sam's new departure in securing a horse at large. He took care of a good many during court week, in the way of feeding, watering, hitching and unhitching them, for which, in some cases, he received compensation, and some he didn't. But let this be as it may, we propose to tell here how Sam proceeds to secure his old black mare when she is loose upon the streets. He supplies himself with six feet of plow line which he carries in his pistol pocket to prevent her from seeing it, and with nubbins of corn he chunks her and when they fall she stops to nibble them, he slips upon her and secures her. Sam says this is the only way he can catch her when she is out to gambol on the green," and he says very often he has to throw seventy-five or thirty nubbins before he succeeds in bringing her in.

Bishop Pierce in LaGrange.

From the LaGrange, Ga., Reporter.

Bishop Pierce is aging rapidly. His step is feeble, his voice often fails him. As we look upon the venerable, now bowed form of this once erect and grand man of God, we thought of the crown awaiting him beyond the surges of the river of death. Like a father among his children, like a good shepherd in the midst of his flock, he presides over this conference, nearly all of whom are his boys—trained to preach under his eye. The bishop is still in LaGrange, the guest of Reverend P. A. Heard. He will go hence next week to preside over the Alabama conference at Troy. He might well claim to be retired, but will doubtless work on in the cause he loves until the harness shall fall from his weary shoulders at the touch of death.

A Yam Tough Yarn.

From the Hawkinsville, Ga., News.

Mr. W. G. Clarke, of this county, steps to the front with the biggest potato "yarn" we have heard of this season. He says two gentlemen from this county found a potato in Florida weighing 650 pounds. They bought the potato, bored a hole through the middle of the same and attached shafts, and then buying an ox, they rolled the potatoe home wheelbarrow fashion. Let Mr. Clarkr go head on "taters."

Probably.

From the Montezuma, Ga., Weekly.

Mr. A. J. Parris of Reynolds, and Miss M. E. Goodman, of this county, were married in a romantic manner at Oglethorpe, on last Thursday, by Judge A. H. Greer. A buggy containing the couple was driven up hastily before the office door, the squire was informed that his services were needed, and without alighting from the buggy the words were spoken that made them man and wife. It was probably a runaway match.

Death of an Octogenarian.

From the Rome, Ga., Courier.

The death of Dr. F. W. Cheney occurred in Chattooga county. Dr. Cheney was one of the most influential and highly respected citizens of this community, and in his death we lose a most excellent Christian gentleman, one whose name and memory will long be cherished. He had outlived his "three score years and ten" and died at the advanced age of about 80 years.

Early in the Morning.

From the Dooly, Ga., Vindicator.

One of Vienna's gallant young men, in fear of some of his rivals getting the "ins" on him, sends his note up to his dulcina to make an engagement before she is through with her morning nap. It does very well for our young friend, but it is very hard on the girl to be roused up before day to answer notes.

THE STATE PULSE.

From the Milledgeville, Ga., Union.

Sawney Grantland, an aged colored man, well-known as a ground pea peddler, dropped dead on Thursday last.

From the Vienna, Ga., Vindicator.

Mayor Davis was stirring early this morning to secure a guard to place at the junction of the Perry and Montezuma roads to prevent the small-pox entering town.

From the Dublin, Ga., Post.

Mr. Willy Stucky lost a little two-year-old child on the 27th ultimo with diphtheria croup that is so prevalent in this section. A good sober physician could do well to locate at Nickleville.

From the Sandersville, Ga., Mercury.

Miss Emma Clarke, of Wesleyan Female college, in consequence of the recent appearance of scarlet fever at that intitution, has returned home. The boys are glad of it—not the fever of course, but of her return home.

From the Talbotton, Ga., Register.

Talbotton's present healthfulness is very gratifying this fall, and has been all the year. She has so far had but one death from any kind of fever in seven or eight months which is very different from what it was last year, for which her people ought to be very thankful.

From the Fort Valley, Ga., Mirror.

We regret to know that children of Mr. A. D. Skellie are afflicted with diphtheria, and Mr. Skellie is also very sick. Dr. Holt is with them. In consequence of scarlet fever having made it appearance in Wesleyan Female college, the young ladies are leaving by the score. Misses Stella Harris and Annie Turner came home on Thursday evening.

THE GEORGIA TROPICS.

Beautiful Flowers, Fruits and Shrubs Flourishing in Midwinter.

From the Thomasville, Ga., Enterprise.

The handsomest specimen of the dwarf orange tree and its fruit that we ever saw is at the Mitchell house green house. It is about a year and a half old, sixteen inches high, well shaped and has seven well grown ripe oranges. The tree was grown by Mr. W. C. Esson, who has a number of them. They are about as hardy as the large orange and deserve a place in every yard. After looking at this tree we strolled through the green house, and were suprised to see the progress Mr. Idener had made since his beginning. A large collection of hot house as well as open ground plants are already well grown and many others in process of rooting. Among the vegetable curiosities to be seen there are well grown cucumber vines with an abundance of young fruit and blooms. In one department, is a small pool, in which a small alligator disports himself, as happy as if in his native quarters. Mr. Idener also showed us a new arrival of designs for floral work, which include something appropriate for every occasion—from the cradle to the grave. The designs for bridal bouquets are especially lovely.

Death of Rome's Patient.

From the Rome, Ga., Courier.

Christopher Mitchell, the small-pox patient at the pest house, died at an early hour yesterday morning. The remains were properly interred. The quarantined family will be kept at the pest house a few days longer, and if they show no signs of having contracted the disease, will be set at liberty.

BEYOND THE RIVER.

Away Across the Mississippi is Held a Convincing Conversation.

"I tell you, sir, that they are of the neatest combinations ever produced, and my experience of that sort of thing has been wide enough to entitle my [illegible]"

[illegible] the first speaker's friend, with a l[illegible] he didn't take much interest i[illegible] able to see mu[illegible] they are all pretty nearly the same size, and made of about the same stuff."

The talk, of which the foregoing is a fragment, took place in Gallatin, Missouri, not long ago, in the snug office of Dr. M. P. Flowers, one of the leading physicians of the state, who followed up the vein in which he had introduced it substantially in these words:

"Nonsense, that is the rigmarole of a boy, or rather of a man who either doesn't know or doesn't care what he says. Those things, as you call them, are just as different as the moon is from green cheese. Now, liniments, lotions and ointments are very good in most cases for the relief of pain or inflammation. But, in the first place they are unclean. They soil the hands and the linen, besides being always out of reach when they are most wanted."

"Well, my dear doctor," sighed the traveler from the north, "what would you have? This is a wretched world anyhow, and nothing is ever at hand when it is wanted. You can't suggest anything——"

"Yes, I can," broke in the doctor, thumping the table with his fist, "I can suggest BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER. I have tried it on my patients, and I have tried it on myself for an attack of Neumonia, and in all cases relief has followed in from three to forty-eight hours. The old plasters are stage coaches—the Capcine is a telegraphic dispatch. For instance, in cases of Neuralgia, Muscular Rheumatism, Lumbago, retarded action of the Kidneys, and——"

"I give it up, doctor, and in case of need I'll buy Benson's," said the traveler, pleasantly.

In the center of the genuine is CUT the word CAPCINE.

Southern Sanitarium.

THIS MEDICAL INSTITUTION, FORMERLY known as the Atlanta Health Institute or "Water Cure," is now complete and in daily operation, and is more than ever considered a

A Model Home for Invalid Ladies and Gentlemen.

The luxurious and costly appointments, medical apparatuses and appliances introduced since the purchase of our present location and the erection of our new Medical Department, have justly earned for this Sanitarium the name of being one of the foremost and most elegantly fitted up institutions of its kind in the United States.

OVER TWO THOUSAND PERSONS have by our methods of treatment under our personal guidance been entirely restored to health without administering a single dose of either Mineral, Vegetable or Animal drug nostrums of any kind whatsoever, and in the future, as in the past, none but Normal and Physiological agents and means will ever be employed at this Sanitarium as aids in restoring the sick to health. AUCTION SALES—REAL ESTATE.

T. A. Frierson, Auctioneer. — JASPER at auction. The first grand excursion and sale on the Marietta and North Georgia railroad will take place Wednesday, December 20th, when the new railroad town of Jasper, 70 miles from Atlanta, will be sold. The good people of Jasper and the adjacent country will extend a hearty welcome and free hospitality to their neighbors from Atlanta and other towns in the shape of a nice country picnic. A good brass band will accompany the excursion and discourse fine music during the day, and everything will be done to make the trip enjoyable. Jasper occupies a very elevated position on one of the foot hills of the Blue Ridge mountains in Pickens county, Georgia. The climate is most delightful and salubrious and the water is pure and good as any in the state. The lands around are productive, and adapted to a great variety of farm and garden products, fruits, clover and the grasses. The very elevated and aired position of the town renders it exceedingly pleasant, healthy and desirable as a summer resort. From the town of Jasper the lands slope away in two directions gradually downward to broad and beautiful valleys of fields and forests, and then gradually upward again to distant hills and glens and the more distant Blue Ridge mountains, whose rugged peaks tower high above all and form the background of one of the grandest, most varied and picturesque landscape views in Georgia. The view beggars description, and is alone worth the time and cost of the trip Well informed tourists claim that the view from Jasper is the grandest to be seen from any point in the state, and that the new town is destined to become a very popular health and pleasure resort. Springs of valuable mineral waters are conveniently located near the town, and the country abounds in fruits and farm products, thus at one time and place the senses may be delighted, health improved and appetite appeased. The sale will be a large and important one, embracing business lots, residence lots, the hotel and a number of nice dwelling houses, etc. Plats giving plan of the town and full description of the property to be sold will be ready Wednesday, and all who wish to get them will please call or write to me for them. Trains will leave Atlanta early in the morning and return early. Low rates will be procured over both roads, so that all who desire to attend can do so. Plats will contain full information. T. A. Frierson, real estate agent, 10 Wall street, Atlanta, Ga. 400

Conyers, Ga., December 9th 1882.

IN MEMORIAM.

Departed this life in the city of Atlanta, December 1, 1882, Woodruff D. Wiley, in the 39th year of his age.

This sad announcement will send a thrill of genuine sorrow to many hearts. Mr. Wiley was well known to the people of Georgia and other states of the union. For nearly twenty years at the different leading hotels of Atlanta, his genial smile and cordial greeting welcomed and soothed the weary traveler.

"Oh! there are looks and tones that dart
An instant sunshine through the heart."

His placid brow revealed the goodness of his heart. Civil, polite, obliging, he delighted in making others happy. As he never once caused his mother's heart an ache, so to none was he ever known to give offense. His presence behind the register was the best recommendation of any house. Open and candid, jealousy or duplicity found no place in his nature. Proprietors of public inns knew his worth, and vied with each other to secure and retain his services. He was a universal favorite.

"None knew him but to love him;
None named him but to praise."

In Madison, where he was reared and best known, he is esteemed a model of every natural and moral excellence.

While yet a mere boy, his young heart, fired at his country's wrongs, he buckled on his armor and went forth to meet the foe. His comrades in arms with one harmonious voice, testify that he passed the ordeal of a soldier's life unstained, and that a youth of higher tone or nobler qualities ever wore the gray. As a mark of appreciation he was appointed postmaster of his regiment. While in faithful discharge of the duties of this office, he was captured at Hagerstown and imprisoned in Fort Delaware, where exposed to the rigors of a northern winter, he caught the seeds of that fell disease which at length has ripened into death.

He died of consumption. Ere yet the sun of his manhood had reached its zenith, it goes down in the waters of death. To-day he lies in the cheerless tomb, a victim to his country's wrongs.

His remains being taken to Madison, his funeral was preached in the Presbyterian church to a large concourse of citizens who came to pay the last tribute of respect to the memory of one they had known so long and loved so well. On that solemn occasion strong men bowed their heads in sorrow, and copious streams were seen to flow from eyes unused to tears. In the old cemetery hard by, his remains were deposited, and his dust mingles with its kindred dust.

Mr. Wiley leaves a disconsolate ... of Colonel White, of the ... and four lovely children ... and weeping, ... promises of a ... passeth ... not ... so ... less ... ha ...

THE CONSTITUTION,
Atlanta, Georgia.

ATLANTA, GA., DECEMBER 10, 1882.

THE signal service bureau report indicates for the south Atlantic states, northeasterly winds, veering to the east and south; lower barometer, partly cloudy weather and light rains.

WHILE the state press is laden with glowing accounts of second crops of apples, blushing plums, delicious strawberries, and the palatable persimmon, an alarming cry goes up as to the scarcity of eggs. Christmas without egg-nog would be as tame as egg-nog without eggs

IT would be folly to ignore the fact that small-pox exists in several widely separated parts of Georgia and that vigilant measures are necessary on the part of all municipal authorities to prevent the pest from finding a lodgment. Rambling negroes who have been in contact with the contagion are likely to turn up anywhere.

THERE is scarcely a county in the state in which the local option law is not being agitated. The late session of the legislature was fairly deluged with bills of prohibition. If it keeps up much longer it will soon be difficult for a liquor vendor to find a spot which is outside of a local option county, or over four miles from a church or school, whereon to set up in business.

THE Chicago Herald declares that its city has become the Mecca of criminals. Professional gamblers, thieves, footpads, burglars and murderers find a residence in the city both safe and pleasant. The police force is small and inefficient, and the Herald makes the bold charge that the criminal classes really control the action of the city's officials. It is no credit to America that such things can even be asserted of the second city of the country.

SENATOR MORGAN'S rider to the bankruptcy bill is one which should be added and passed if possible. It is to prevent "dealing in futures," the curse of the south, and what he says of an "interior town in Alabama," is true of the whole south—the amount being changed. He says if such a law existed "six hundred thousand dollars would have been saved to some of the very best people in that city, its wives and children, which were squandered in a single season in betting on futures in cotton."

THE Art Loan is to be kept open all of next week. This is welcome news, for as an art educator the longer the exhibition is open the deeper impression it will make in the tastes and aspirations of the people. We trust the result will be pecuniarily satisfactory to the library association; but even if it creates a deficiency, the good it will other wise do calls for a similar exhibition next year. The library should consider an annual art show as an important and indispensable feature of its work.

A STORY OF FOUR BOYS.

THE CONSTITUTION has printed many a story of denial, energy and heroism, but none more deserving than the story of the Green boys, which may be found in another column.

These four boys started a few years ago selling newspapers. They made ten cents apiece the first morning they went to work, and for two winters thereafter they went, barefooted, through the snow and sleet in the freezing dawn, on their morning rounds. From the very first they saved a certain per centage of their earnings, which they wisely invested in Atlanta real estate. The oldest of them is now eighteen years of age, and the youngest twelve. They have supported an invalid father and their mother all the time, and now have property worth considerably over $5,000, houses from which the rent is $20 a month, and $200 stock in a building and loan association. They have educated themselves the meanwhile, remaining from school this year in order that they might work the harder and build a home for their parents that is to have a front parlor and a bay window in it. These little fellows have been carriers, newsboys, errand boys and apprentices about THE CONSTITUTION office, and one of them is now assistant mailing-clerk. Their net saving from their sales and salaries, exclusive of their rents, has been $20 a week for this year. Next year they can do better and by the time the oldest of the brothers is of age they ought to have a comfortable little fortune.

What these boys have done, other boys can do. The whole secret is steadiness, sobriety, industry and economy. There are few lessons more important for boys than that the smallest amount—no matter how little it may be—will make a great fortune if it is only saved and invested, and that the smallest income—no matter how small—will make a man independent if he will only live inside of it and compound its surplus. It must have been discouraging to these youngsters when it took them a month to lay up a single dollar, and heroic in them when they laid this and went barefooted over frozen than use it to buy shoes with. when they are comfortably and everybody about them savings amount to than they were They have e enanly arty se-

THE OPELIKA SCANDAL.

Without stopping to enquire where the blame lies, or taking any part in the unfortunate quarrel which has transformed the citizens of a beautiful city into a band of Ishmaelites, the question arises whether or not the state of things reported in Opelika should be permitted to continue indefinitely? Is there no law in Alabama by which human life can be protected when municipal authority proves either unwilling or unable to perform its functions?

Here is the anomaly of a city fully officered, its government recognized by every court in Alabama, and yet its mandates are systematically disregarded on the one hand, while its officers, on the other hand, never take a step which does not bring discredit upon selves. As a consequence there is neither security for peaceably disposed people, nor local court of recourse for those who may have wrongs. The shooting of Friday, as a result of which nine men were wounded, exhibits a state of things to which there seems to be no end.

Mayor Dunbar, having failed to pacify the people or make himself respected, the county authorities being, so far as the protection of life is concerned, a mere cipher, does it not devolve upon Alabama to take some means of keeping the people of Opelika from each other's throats? Governor O'Neal could not better signalize his administration than by energeticaliy proceeding in this case. The legislature is in session, and it is fully competent for it to repeal the charter of the city and put it for awhile into the hands of a commission. Alabama owes it to herself to do something, and that at once.

OUR FOREIGN TRADE.

The credit balance of our foreign trade for the month of October amounted to $10,000,000, and this is regarded as an indication that gold will soon begin to flow to this country. The outflow of staples is well maintained, with every prospect of continuance until every bit of our surplus is exhausted. This was not conceded two months ago, but every day makes it plainer that Europe will need all we have to spare, whether it is cotton, wheat, meats, petroleum, butter, cheese or corn. Recent statistics published in a Paris market journal of undoubted authority, puts the wheat deficiency of Europe at 219,000,000 bushels, and the surplus of the seven great wheat growing countries at 292,000,000. But there are already indications that this estimate is an understatement of the world's needs. No allowance was made on account of the partial failure of the German potato crop. Holland also had a poor potato crop. The summer root crops of all Europe were poor. In the west of Ireland a famine is feared. A large part of these deficiencies must be met in this country. The exports of India are nearly exhausted; ice is closing many of the Russian ports, and the Australian shipments are practically stopped. America is again the granary of the world, and ocean freight room is scarce and dear. Every vessel that leaves our ports is crowded with our staples, and they will continue to be crowded until the people of Europe are clothed and fed. We have an abundance of cotton and food, but probably not a pound more of either than Europe will want at fair prices. This is the present outlook. This is why wheat and corn and cotton do not decline in value as some predicted. And this is why sterling exchange is near the gold-importing point, and the balance of trade is in our favor, and the import of gold will soon be resumed. Some credit however should be given to the diminution in the purchase of luxuries from abroad, which bids fair to go further.

THE CENTRAL RAILROAD AND ITS LINES

The forty-seventh annual report of the president and directors of the Central railroad and banking company is signed by General E. P. Alexander. Considering the fact that it has been prepared by a new administration which came into office after the death of Colonel William M. Wadley, the late president, and after the close of the year the operations of which form the basis of the report, the document is one of the best and clearest that has ever been placed before the stockholders. The new president evidently has an eye for the smallest details connected with the great property which has been placed in his charge, and the embodiment of these in his report gives it special interest. These details relate more particularly to the interests of the Central in connecting roads—in the leased lines, and in those operated by separate companies, the net results of which are due to the Central.

The net earnings of the Central system proper for 1882 are $1,047,273, against $1,387,735 in 1881. The expenses are $2,414,295 against $,305,661 in 1881. General Alexander points out that no construction accounts are kept on any of the lines, but the whole cost of the yearly improvements in their condition and outfit, by the substitution of steel for iron rails, and additions to motive-power, rolling-stock, and depot and terminal facilities, as well as all taxes, are included in operating expenses, so that what is reported as net is really net, subject only to interest and rentals, or what are generally called fixed charges.

The tables presented by the president show a general falling off in gross receipts. This falling off averages about six per cent on the principal roads of the Central system, but General Alexander says it is doubtless due to the generally bad crop of the last cotton year. That the growth of the business of the lines has been heavy is shown by the fact that the gross receipts of the roads are about ten per cent in excess of the gross receipts in 1880. The earnings of the steamship company show a steady increase.

The falling off in the net earnings is due to the increase of expenses, of which no detailed account is given. The expenses, however, cover the gradual remodeling of all the roads of the system and their rolling stock in accordance with modern demands, as well as provisions for increased facilities. These improvements have been liberal and progressive during the past two years, and the president points with pride to the fact that the roads are now in good condition, and able to meet all the demands made upon them.

With respect to the lease of the Georgia road, General Alexander says that it was determined by those acting for the lessees to put the road in the best possible condition. It was also determined to extend the Athens branch across the Oconee to a favorable location in Athens. The whole main line of the Georgia road is in steel, and although the net income for the first year of the lease was only $449,521.18, the business of the road justifies the hope that the lease will become, after this fiscal year, a source of direct profit, in addition to the increased facilities for competition which the Central enjoys over the leased lines.

With respect to the physical condition of the roads, it may be stated that of the main line from Savannah to Atlanta 225 miles is laid in steel, and 70 in iron. The Augusta branch has 16 miles of steel, and 37 of iron; the Southwestern road and branches have 46 miles of steel, and 297 of iron. The Montgomery and Eufaula road has 20 miles of steel, and 61 of iron. All renewals of tracks are made in steel, which is laid where the traffic is heaviest.

Superintendent W. F. Shellman, of the Southwestern railroad, whose report is included in the pamphlet before us, is evidently of the opinion that the railroad commission has a good deal to do with the decrease of $10,772.96 in his road, and likewise with the increase of $51,197.05 in gross expenses. If the commission is responsible for these things, it is also responsible for the increase of $40,176.54 in passenger earnings. Indeed, the passenger earnings of all the lines have been largely increased, showing that the commission's rate of three cents a mile is not only a good thing for the people, but for the roads also.

In this connection, it should be said that the earnings and expenses of all the lines operated by the Central show that the operations of the commission have not tended to cripple the roads in the slightest, whereas the people have been saved immense sums in the shape of unnecessary and unjust taxes in freight charges. On the other hand, the small losses of the roads in this direction have been more than offset by the stimulation of passenger travel.

THERE are hundreds of negroes in Georgia who consider themselves leaders of their race. These colored leaders have been blacking the boots of the white republicans and carrying out their spittoons for fifteen years, and they have received no more substantial reward than an occasional two dollar bill. And now the great republican party is dead and the country is preparing to give it a big funeral in 1884. What do the colored leaders propose to do about it in the meantime? The outlook is very gloomy from a republican point of view.

LITTLE MR. GENIOUS HALE is trying hard, and not without success, to play the part of clown at the republican funeral. He pulled out his trombone the other day when Senator Beck had his political assessment investigation up for consideration, and wanted congress to investigate the contributions made to the democratic committee by private individuals. When Genious wiggles his ears his trombone has a familiar sound.

WE heard nothing of a law for the protection of dogs during the session of the legislature, and yet it is well known that the sheep, aided by the prolific Angora goats, are rapidly thinning out out native curs and whiffets. Modern legislation lacks enterprise.

THE man with whom New York society slander has associated Mrs. Langtry's name, is named Hutchins, or McWiggins, or something of that kind. The name, as well as the slander, is typical of the freedom of our institutions.

FRANK HATTON, who is a good journalist, makes a very flabby office holder. He has doubtless made this discovery for himself, and he may well ask himself: "Was it for this I printed a Grant paper on white satin?"

MR. CONKLING has a convenient case in Washington. Johnny O'Brien was practicing before the administration a few days ago, and now Steve French will have to go down and see a man.

DORSEY'S blindness is probably due to the mistake he made in supposing that the country is blind. An honest jury will give him a dose of eyewater that will do the business.

THE state of the thermometer during the past day or two ought to cause Atlanta charity to rub its hands together and look out for business.

GORHAM'S friends claim that if he is elected secretary of the senate a fatal blow will be struck at the solid south. We reserve our hilarity.

IT is suggested that some of the most prominent stalwarts propose, in order to make the half-breeds feel bad, to join the kuklux.

MR. ARTHUR'S ardor in behalf of civil service reform and all that sort of thing is about as good as a Punch and Judy show.

THE girls have discovered that the thin legs of habitual cigarette smokers prevent them from waltzing well.

JUDGE TOURGEE not only says that the republican party is dead, but he admits that it is beginning to stink.

DORSEY is none too blind to be the secretary of the republican national committee.

NOTES AND OPINIONS.

PENNSYLVANIA has 3,596 post-offices, which is 500 more than any other state.

THE Orlando, Fla., Reporter speaks of an orange raised near that town that weighed twenty-six ounces.

THE North Missourian says a man near Macon city sold this fall $5,000 worth of apples from a forty-acre orchard.

THE organized militia of South Carolina consists of eighty-one companies of state volunteer troops, (white,) numbering 4,376 men, and twenty companies of national guard, (colored,) numbering 1,185 men; aggregate 5,561.

THE Opelika Times commends the Georgia railroad commission and says: Now let our legislature enact such a law as they have in Georgia, and let the commission enforce it on the same plan, and an era of prosperity and good fellowship will be marked.

THE old saying "he's got his money in a sand bank," meaning that a man had none at all, is likely to change to mean the same as a gold mine. Near New York City there are two million dollars invested in sand banks from which 4,500 tons a day are taken to New York.

IT is rumored that many of the national banks of New York City will become state banks in consequence of the opinion of the attorney general that the certification of checks as practised for the accommodation of brokers, and its substitute, "acceptances," are illegal.

THE consumption of thread of the best grades in the United States is 21,000,000 spools per annum. American manufacturers turn out daily 12,000 dozen spools, containing 200 yards each, which is far from meeting the demand, and European manufacturers find a large market here.

AN alarm of fire was sounded a few nights ago, while a Stanford, Ky., minister was praying in church, and opening his eyes the divine was surprised to see that his congregation had disappeared. After the fire was out the truants returned, and the preacher resumed his prayer where he left off.

A COMPANY has just been organized in New York city to buy and improve a tract of land in the City of Mexico, on both sides of the Pasea de la Reforma, which comprises more than 5,000 ordinary city lots. The price is $50,000. It is the purpose of the new owners to improve the property by building houses ranging from $10,000 to $20,000 in value, and also a large American hotel.

OVER 100,000 white men were not able to vote at the late election in Virginia because they had not paid their poll-tax. Politicians are now agitating in favor of repealing the tax, arguing that it is an incentive to bribery, by tempting rich candidates for office to pay the poll-tax for poor men. Governor Long and Governor-elect Butler, of Massachusetts, where the same system exists, have expressed their disapproval of it.

THE Charleston News and Courier says: The most significant and encouraging event in the recent history of Charleston took place yesterday, when the machinery of the vast cotton mill of the Charleston Manufacturing company was formally and most successfully tested. Work on the mill began in August, 1881, and now, with its fifteen thousand spindles and a capacity for fifteen thousand more, it stands complete, the equal, in plan, in construction and equipment, of any cotton mill in the United States, north or south.

He put his arm around her waist
Then paralyzed did fall,
And butted his æsthetic head
Against the parlor wall
She raised him gently to a seat,
Asked, "Love, what was't thou felt?"
He murmured gently in her ear:
"Unloose the electric belt."

PERSONAL INTELLIGENCE.

POET WHITTIER will be seventy-five years old next Sunday.

SENATOR "BLACK JACK" LOGAN wears a blood red necktie and a green silk handkerchief.

JOHN B. GOUGH, the temperance lecturer, has lectured 8,480 times to 8,500,000 people, and traveled 448,000 miles. He is 65 years old.

THE New York Sun's correspondent says Senator Barrow has a high forehead, but in other respects might be accepted as Senator Frye's twin brother.

U. S. GRANT, JR., has sold his residence in West Fifty-eighth street, New York, to D. G. Ambler, for $52,000 cash, and 15,000 acres of land in Baker county, Florida.

MAHONE wears an immense white sombrero and an immaculate white shirt. He wears no vest and has an enormous gold chain wandering all over his shirt front.

SERGEANT BALLANTINE, who stands at the head of the English criminal bar, and who is nobody knows how old, has come over here to lecture. His reminiscences will be his subject.

JOHN RUSKIN, the artist and critic, works and sleeps in a little 12-foot room at the top of an elegant mansion at Herne hill, which is all the more remarkable since the room was his nursery in childhood.

CLAYTON MCMICHAEL, the new marshal of the District of Columbia, is 39 years old, half owner and editor of the Philadelphia North American, the oldest American daily newspaper, and he is wealthy, educated and agreeable.

UNITED STATES SENATOR WILLIAM P. FRYE, of Maine, had representatives of four generations of his and his wife's families around his hospitable board at his thanksgiving dinner. There were present two great-grandparents, six grandparents, and seven great-grandchildren, besides the children, uncles and aunts.

RIDDLEBERGER told a New York reporter, "I have no stomach for fighting now. There was a time when I was afraid to say that much, but I am free to confess that I have had quite enough fighting in my time, and I think perhaps it may just as well be understoood now as later."

SEABORN REESE, as seen by a northern correspondent, is "tall, broad shouldered, and very compact in figure; his features show the color and lines of much exposure to the weather. His hair, a sandy-brown yellow, bleached at the roots and ends, was combed straight back from a narrow forehead, without part, curling at the tips. The lower part of this sharp-featured face was hidden by a moustache and a long tuft of chin whiskers."

THERE is a great sameness about public banquets of the day, beginning with soup and ending with fruit. It is nobody's fault if not the caterers'.

AT fashionable dinner parties of the period very little pastry is served, and any one who has pie is voted "too awfully common for anything."

"MA," he asked, at dinner, "who was Charlotte Russe?" "Oh!" said ma, "she was one of them old queens what made trouble during the Restoration."

SOME one very properly asked in view of the prevalence of kitchen French bills of fare, why not oysters on the half-shell instead of huitres en coquilles."

WHAT we serve as filet of sole in this country is nothing more nor less than the common flounder, but many people believe it the imported fish.

CARLISLE.

Remarkable Leadership of the Coming Speaker of Congress.

Washington correspondence Detroit Free Press.

No public man in recent years has made a more enviable reputation than John G. Carlisle. His influence and strength among public men have grown rapidly in recent years. He has not attained his prominence by a large quantity of speech-making in the house of representatives. It has been a fine quality of speech-making that has given him so great repute as a debater. His first appearance in Washington was as a member of the forty-fifth congress. Speaker Randall then gave him an obscure committee position; he was assigned to the committee on expenditures in the navy department, and he was also put at the foot of the list of democrats on the committee on the electoral count. Although he was thus deprived of many opportunities enjoyed by some of his associates, yet Mr. Carlisle was a laborious and diligent student of important public questions and the details of legislation. He did not seek prominence. He was then, as he is now, a quiet, unassuming man, approachable, courteous and dignified. The leading members of both parties gradually came to know him as a man of exceptionally good judgment, a clear thinker, a strong logician, and a member who was never carried away by extreme views or party passion. In the organization of the forty-sixth house of representatives Mr. Carlisle was transferred from the committee on expenditures in the navy department to the ways and means committee. Some of the colleagues on that committee were old and experienced members—Fernando Wood, General Garfield and Judge Kelley. But protectionists and revenue reformers alike, both in and out of congress, were not long in discovering that Mr. Carlisle was, in some respects, the strongest man on the committee. From that day to this the tariff monopolists have feared Carlisle more than any other man in public life.

One of the largest iron manufacturers in the United States sat in the house gallery one day last session and listened intently and nervously to Carlisle's speech on the tariff commission bill and the tariff question in general. After Carlisle had concluded, the distinguished protectionist remarked to a friend at his side: "I have read all the big anti-protection speeches ever made in congress, but I have never read nor heard one so able, so powerful and so dangerous as the one we've just listened to. I have never before heard such a clear, strong, logical presentation of the issues in controversy."

Judge Kelley, who has great admiration for Carlisle, made at the time similar comments on the speech referred to.

A few weeks afterward Senator Bayard said to me that he had just finished reading the speech, and he expressed the opinion that taken all in all, it was the strongest tariff speech he had ever read.

Senators and representatives have not yet ceased to quote from Mr. Carlisle's speech on the three per cent bill and the national banks. It was made in the forty-sixth congress, and it is an admirable example of Mr. Carlisle's method of discussion of great public questions. Nobody has ever successfully replied to that argument.

The views and opinions of no other member of congress are so largely requested in private conferences as are the views and opinions of Mr Carlisle regarding important subjects: and the public men who appropriate the results of his study and his thought are not few and far between.

Nothing but bargaining and the machinations of the protectionists can prevent his election to the speakership of the next house. He is in every way qualified for the high duties of the presiding officer of that body. He is without exception the ablest and most accomplished parliamentarian in congress. He is a master not only of the fundamental principles of parliamentary law, but also of the details and technicalities of the existing rules of the house. In addition to these rare qualities, Mr. Carlisle has other mental traits necessary to the proper discharge of the duties of the speakership. He is fair minded and exceptionally free from personal and partisan prejudices, and has the respect and confidence of political opponents to an extent seldom equaled in public life.

This all may appear to some to be very high praise, but it is not extravagant; it is simply the just expression of a study of the man and his record—a careful study extending several years and with good opportunities for reaching a safe and accurate estimate.

A high officer of the treasury department, a man of great knowledge of public men and public affairs, remarked the other day: "The election of a democratic president in 1884 will, in my judgment, depend not a little on the result of the speakership contest. The selection of Carlisle would have a very favorable effect upon the country, and would be the beginning of a new era in the history of American politics."

CAMPAIGN SECRETS.

Dorsey's Threat against Arthur as Voiced by Joe Pulitzer, of St. Louis.

Joseph Pulitzer, editor and owner of the Post-Dispatch, writes to his paper over his own signature a startling statement concerning the star route robbers. He says: "The prosecution was in the hands of Attorney General MacVeagh, who was a very hard man indeed to manage. Garfield could not control MacVeagh without great difficulty. He foresaw a break of his relations with his own attorney general, and did not want to compromise himself. When it was first known that MacVeagh really intended to have Dorsey indicted and prosecuted, Dorsey came all the way from his well advertised sheep ranch in New Mexico, and went to the white house. Garfield assured him that he would do all he could for him. With his usual gush and warmth, he told Dorsey not to give himself any uneasiness about the outcome, but to return to his ranch and feel sure that he (Garfield) would be his friend. But, in spite of all this, MacVeagh proceeded with his case, retained detectives and special counsel, collected testimony, and drew, upon promise of immunity from smaller members of the ring, a confession of guilt which was sure to convict Dorsey. Alarmed by the reports of MacVeagh's doings, Dorsey returned in the spring of 1881 to the east. While in New York MacVeagh actually procured a warrant for Dorsey's arrest. The warrant was about to be issued, but cunning Dorsey had his secret agents everywhere. He heard of this move by telegraph. He saw his peril. There was only one man who could save him. He took the next train to Washington. He arrived there late at night. He went from the depot to the white house. He appealed to Garfield to keep his promise and to save him. Garfield sent for MacVeagh. What then ensued may be inferred from the fact that the warrant for Dorsey's arrest was never served, but withdrawn. The incident is historical and known to be true by Blaine. It has never been published, but it is true, all the same, and MacVeagh will not dare deny it. By way of digression, it may be said that Dorsey is practically a ruined man. Not long ago the St. Louis Globe-Democrat contained a description of Dorsey's alleged princely domain in New Mexico, with its millions of acres of lands and hundreds of thousands of cattle. Dorsey has no such domain. The ranch he actually did have he had to sell to Bosler, the great Pennsylvania cattle king. Unlucky speculations, extravagant habits and an army of greedy lawyers have made him poor already. He is broken down, mentally and physically. He has a serious affection of his eyesight. Those who know all about him say that he lives in Washington, engaged in no business, trying to save his health and liberty and to prevent a worse fate that may yet be in store for him. But the most remarkable figure in this case is that of Arthur, president of the United States; for it is the same Arthur now, by the comical irony of fate, directing the prosecution of Dorsey who, at the celebrated banquet at Delmonico's, delivered the eulogy stating that it was Dorsey more than anybody else who deserved credit for carrying Indiana and electing Garfield and Arthur. It is perfectly well known, and no secret whatever, that during the last presidential campaign Arthur, as chairman of the New York state committee and Dorsey as secretary of the national committee and confident of Garfield, were in the closes possible intimacy and constant confidential intercourse. After the Indiana campaign was over, Dorsey and Arthur managed the campaign in New York, upon which everybody knew the presidential election actually depended. It is well known that Dorsey alone and personally raised a very large sum of money, which he and Arthur jointly distributed. It is a part of the secret history of that campaign that the republican finance committee, of which such bankers as Levi P. Morton, Kountze, and Seligman were members, raised over $300,000 and placed it in the hands of Arthur and Dorsey. Jay Gould alone contributed $100,000. The money was actually locked up in the safe of the Fifth Avenue hotel, where the republican campaign committee had its headquarters, and the money was paid out in one of the rooms of that hotel by Dorsey upon the personal orders of Chester A. Arthur, then chairman of the republican state committee. The larger part of that money was expended in New York city and Brooklyn. That it was well expended was shown by the result—the extraordinary reduction in the democratic vote, which alone enabled the republicans to carry the state. These are all facts communicated by prominent republicans who had personal knowledge of the transactions. Though a secret to the general public, the facts are known to quite a number of the more important politicians. It is quite likely that, if Dorsey should be convicted, these campaign secrets may not remain secret very long. Dorsey has bushels of notes and letters received by both Garfield and Arthur during the late campaign. He has an exact account of the money spent in Indiana, showing the amount sent each county. He has also the exact figures of the vast sums of money contributed and expended for the purpose of carrying New York. If the secretary of the republican national committee should go to the wall in the coming trial, it is possible that a great deal of the secret but intensely interesting history of the late presidential campaign will become pretty widely known."

THE CENTRAL ROAD.

From the Augusta, Ga., News.

The Central railroad directors have declared the semi-annual four per cent dividend, payable after the 20th instant, and a surplus of $180,000 remains for the payment of interest on bonds in January. The stock is firm and advancing, and the road seems to be going right ahead under the energetic management of President Alexander. In fact it is evident that the Central is feeling the magnetic presence of the man, and is taking on just such a boom as the Georgia railroad felt after General Alexander was brought to Augusta as its president. General Alexander must be a very great man, or he would not have so many people who are envious of his success. But in spite of all opposition he continues to succeed and indeed seems to succeed better in the face of heavy odds. He has gone right along with his work, and even in the few months of his control of the Central the stock has advanced, dividends have been declared, business is rapidly growing and the surplus fund increasing. The stockholders who understand business witness his success and will reinstate him in January next by an overwhelming majority. About thirty thousand shares of the stock have already pronounced in his favor and at the usual elections not many more than this amount are ever voted. More shares will be voted in January, of course, on account of the opposition led by Captain Knoul and his friends, but the overwhelming election of General Alexander is assured. In fact the election of Alexander means continued progress, and his defeat will inevitably cause a falling off of interest. When men's interest in the stock of a road is concerned they do not long hesitate in voting for the ablest man for such an eminent position.

HAD A BETTER THING.

From the Detroit Free Press.

It was real funny to see him brace up as he turned the corner, button his threadbare black coat, adjust his hat, shove a pencil over his ear and try to disguise himself. When he had fixed himself, he passed down the street, entered a saloon, and walking straight up to the bar he asked:

"Is your name Blank?"

"I expect it is," was the reply.

"John Blank?"

"Vhell, der poys call me Shon."

"Can I shpeak to you in private, Mr. Blank?"

"You can speak right oudt here. Nopody is aroundt except my poy, und he doan' hear us."

"I thought it would be better to sit down at a table and talk over our glasses of beer."

"I guess not. I can shtand oop und hear all you say."

"Well, Mr. Blank, I have been deputized to ask you if you would be a candidate for mayor next year."

"Me?"

"Yes. You are said to be one of the most popular men in Detroit. You are rich, popular, liberal, and could be elected by a large majority."

The saloonist looked at him for a long minute and then asked:

"Are you dry?"

"Never was so dry in my life."

With a perfectly placid countenance Mr. Blank filled a "schooner" with water, placed it on the bar, and looked the man square in the eye as he said:

"I vhas a tousand times obleeged to der poys, but I can't accept dot office."

"You can't? Don't you want to be mayor of Detroit?"

"No, my friendt. I haf sometings better ash dot. I vhas going to run for governor next time! Come in real often und dhrink to my success!"

LEGISLATIVE GOSSIP.

After all it was a busy session and a good working one.

Speaker Garrard pulled through with fewer mistakes and a better average than any new speaker ever made.

Mr. Watts, of Stewart, established himself as one of the leading thinkers of the house, and a good debater when there was need of debating.

Mr. Pringle, of Washington, goes back to his constituents with the consciousness of having made a good member and of deserving the approbation his people. Few even were more capable than he—were more assiduous or devoted.

Several of THE CONSTITUTION correspondents are in the legislature. Notably among them are Senator Parks and Honorables Mr. Hawks and Rountree. These three gentlemen stood in the very front rank and THE CONSTITUTION is proud of them—as their constituents ought to be.

No man leaves the capital with more friends than Ben Russell, of Decatur. He has won the esteem and confidence of his colleagues and is a favorite with the public. Bluff, incorruptible, and courageous, he has been true to his constituents and devoted to the best interests of the state. Decatur county cannot do better than send Ben Russell back.

Four of the most studious and conscientious members of the senate were Senators Walker, Wilcox, Frederick and Harris. They were always in their places, always anxious to do what was best and pretty apt to find the best way out of any question. There was never a day or a question when the interests of the state would not have been safe in the hands of these four senators alone.

They Make Us Blush.

From the Early County, Ga., News.

There is more genuine enterprise in the management of THE CONSTITUTION than any two other papers we know of in Georgia. Neither trouble nor expense is spared to obtain for its columns the latest news of all kinds, and from all quarters. Where the telegraph lines don't reach, regular and occasional correspondents gather up all items of interest and send them forward, and they soon find their way to all parts of the state through the columns of that enterprising paper.

From the Sandersville Herald.

While some may find fault yet all want to see THE CONSTITUTION, it is in every sense a live, newsy, wide awake, progressive paper. The methods projected to get the reports from all the precincts in the 7th and 9th congressional districts, for publication the night of publication, is one of the most Herculean journalistic feats of this day of enterprise.

From the Jonesboro News.

Everybody in Jonesboro takes THE CONSTITUTION. It has become a necessity.

Significant and Instructive.

From the New York Sun.

Mr. Folger's report on the state of the finances contains a great many words and a great many numerals.

Here are four words and two rows of figures from the accounts of the last fiscal year:

Internal Revenue	$146,497,595
Surplus Revenue	$145,543,810

Volumes of discussion on the state of the finances could add nothing to the force of this coincidence.

The internal revenue has just provided the surplus!

Genial Encouragement From Macon.

From the Macon Telegraph and Messenger.

"Annie" Peachtree street, Atlanta: No, my dear, there will be no jewelry day here. This is an art exhibition and plated ware and washed jewelry and glass beads will not be given a place. Any of our toy stores will display them for you in their windows during holiday week. If you can come down, you can see a lady who attends almost every day, who wears a diamond set, earrings and breastpin worth more money than all the jewelry of all sorts that was ever seen in a Georgia town.

Some Very Cheerful News—Spread It Around.

From the Seed Time and Harvest.

It is not necessary in this age of the world for the famer to rise in the middle of the night and begin to work. This getting up so early in the morning is a relic of barbarism. It has made hundreds of thousands of young men curse the business. There is no need of getting up at 3 or 4 o'clock.

An Injustice Corrected.

From the Washington Republican.

Mr. MacVeagh, in his interview, alludes to the presence of President Arthur at the Dorsey dinner but omits to mention that Mr. Whitelaw Reid was also a distinguished guest. This is unjust to Mr. Reid. He played a very important part in the Indiana campaign.

The Cotton-Tie Tax.

From the Memphis Avalanche.

Now the day for reforming the tariff is come, let everyone concerned in the cotton business remember the odious and oppressive iron cotton-tie tax, and the insolent efforts made by those who levy tribute from the cotton planters to double its amount. The duty is thirty-five per cent.

OLD PHOTOGRAPHS.

Old lady put your glasses on,
With polish'd lenses, mounting golden,
And once again look slowly through
This album olden.

How the old portraits take you back
To friends who once would 'round you gather.
All scattered now like frosted leaves
In blustering weather.

Why, who is this, the bright coquette,
Her eyes with love's bright arrows laden?
"Poor Nell she's living single yet—
An ancient maiden."

And this the fragile poetess,
Whose high soul-yearnings naught could smother?
"She's stouter far than I am now—
A kind granumother."

Who is this girl with flowing hair,
Who on the golden future muses?
"What splendid hair she had, and now
A front she uses."

And this?—"Why if it's not my own!
And did I ever resemble
That bright young creature? Take the book—
My old hands tremble.

It seems like only yesterday
We all were young: ah, how time passes!"
Old lady put the album down,
And wipe your glasses.

WITH HIS BOOTS OFF.

A Murdered Man Out West Who Wouldn't Die With His Boots On.

LITTLE ROCK, December 9.—A frightful affray occurred a few days since on the farm of Dempsey Taylor, three miles from the quiet little town of Osceola, Mississippi county. The participants were all colored men, apparently with no more conception of the value of human life than the most benighted heathen. On Taylor's farm there is a rough board shanty, where the hard characters of the neighborhood congregate to indulge in games of chance. Sunday is the most popular day for the half-civilized ruffians who frequented the place. The little building was known far and wide as the Dice house, probably because many of the rural gang first made the acquaintance of the seductive cubes therein. There have been innumerable fracases at this place, but nothing to compare with the crime enacted there night before last. At the time mentioned John Hickman, Edward Delph and several others were seated around a table playing cards and drinking whisky. The more the players drank the more quarrelsome they became, until at last Hickman jumped upon the table, kicking off the glasses, and denouncing every one in the room. He was ordered by Delph to get down and behave himself, but refused to do so, stating again and again that he had been cheated. Delph then knocked him off the table, whereupon Hickman called him vile names. The result was that Delph, unsheathing a knife, plunged the glittering blade into Hickman's neck. A stream of blood spurted out as the knife was withdrawn, and Hickman, making his way for the door, reeled out and sat upon a log, his life-blood bursting out with every breath. Delph followed and said: "Oh! d—n you I've got you!" Hickman, with one hand over his wound, jumped up and said: "You have killed me, but I will kill you," and started for Delph, who eluded him until he had got away from the house, when he allowed him to come near. Just as Hickman came up, Delph wheeled suddenly and plunged his knife into the abdomen of the dying man, who fell to the ground. Several inmates of the Dice house, who feared further trouble, and who had gone in search of Hickman and Delph, found the former lying in the road, endeavoring to remove his boots, the ground around him soaked with blood. As they came up, he said: "The people always said I would die with my boots on, but I won't," attempting to pull one of them off. He found himself too weak from the loss of blood to succeed, and deliberately took his knife and cut both boots down the front, and kicked them off, saying, as he did so: "There, I will not die in my boots." Then he made another effort to gain his feet, but he was too far gone, and fell over on his face and expired. Delph was captured by the officers, and is now in jail awaiting trial. Dempsy Taylor has also been locked up on the charge of being accessary. The deceased was one of the worst men in the country, a mulato, and uneducated. He feared nothing, and laughed at the idea of dying.

EX-SENATOR M'DONALD.

His Visit to Washington to Help Reform, and His Presidential Prospects.

INDIANAPOLIS, December 9.—Ex-Senator McDonald and wife have left for Washington where, it is understood, they will spend most of the winter. Of course the purpose of Mr. McDonald is to advance his presidential prospects by thus putting himself in contact with influential men in his party from all parts of the country. His prospects at this time certainly seem very bright. That he stands well with his party was forcibly shown in the Cincinnati convention; where, although kept in the background by Mr. Hendricks' friends, he was evidently the choice of a majority of the delegates. In the next national convention he will not be handicapped by any unfriendly opposition in his own state. The Indiana democracy will be solid for him. Mr. Hendricks and his friends have come at last to realize the futility of any further effort on his part, even if the state of his health would warrant it, and he has retired from the presidential contest. Of course it would be sheer folly for Mr. Voorhees to aspire to the leadership of his party. His inconsistent course on the tariff and money questions has brought him into disfavor with the sound men of his party east and west, and his name would not even be considered in connection with the nomination for the presidency. If Mr. Voorhees can succeed himself in the senate two years hence, his ambition will be entirely satisfied. So far as Indiana is concerned, the field is now open to Mr. McDonald for the first time, and the influential men of his party in this state will do all they can to advance his prospects. While he is not either a brilliant or a great man, his record has been that of a safe, consistent, and conservative politician of ability and sagacity, and his course has won for him the full confidence of his party throughout the union. Mr. McDonald gained his present eminence wholly through his own persistent efforts, starting at the lowest round of the ladder as an apprentice to the saddler trade. He has made a fortune out of his law practice, but, being a generous liver and careless in money matters, he is a poor man to-day. He enjoys the confidence and respect of political opponents as well as friends.

THE COLORADO SENATORSHIP.

Governor Pitkin Pretty Certain to be Selected for the Position.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 9.—Certain Colorado politicians here say that there is little doubt of the election of Governor Pitkin as senator from that state, to succeed Mr. Chilcott, whose term expires on the 4th of March. It is claimed that in the issue which was made in the state between ex-senator Chaffee's friends and the adherents of senator Hill, the result was such as to guarantee the success of the faction of the latter. In addition to the avowed friends of Mr. Hill, it is said that governor Pitkin himself has a considerable number of stanch supporters in the new legislature whose first choice he will be. Should, then, the Hill faction agree to unite with Pitkin's adherents, he will have more than votes enough to elect him upon the first ballot. Some members of the legislature who were nominated through the triumph of the Hill faction, and subsequently elected, have been in favor of taking some new man, if one could be found who would appear as their own special candidate. The leaders of the party, who want an anti-Chaffee and anti-Campbell senator elected, fear that such a maneuver will be dangerous, and might result in defeat, and then the safer way would be to unite with Governor Pitkin's supporters rather than to bring forward a man for their own choice. The situation appears to be such, however, that in the opinion of the gentlemen here, they will set aside personal preference and accept Governor Pitkin, whose election will then be guaranteed. It is said that ex-Senator Chaffee will probably not appear as a candidate now, he having been defeated in the struggle for the nominations to the legislature very generally, and as his candidate for governor, who was forced upon the people, having been mercilessly slaughtered at the election. It is believed also that Secretary Teller will not formally allow the use of his name before the legislature, although he and ex-Governor Routt may appear in the role of dark horses should a deadlock ensue.

JEFF DAVIS'S SADDLE.

A Historic Relic in the Fort Valley Library Rooms

From the Perry, Ga., Home Journal.

As is generally known, President Davis, after his capture in Irwin county, was carried a prisoner under escort of federal cavalry along the river road in the eastern portion of this county. Night overtaking the party, they camped at Sandy Run church, near the residence of Mr. G. M. Feagin. During the night, a negro, who was taken into the confidence of the yankees and given free access to the camp, purloined a fine saddle. Next morning, Mr. George Geagin, who went to the camp to bid adieu to the captive ex-president was charged by the officer in command with having stolen the saddle, he having been in the camp the evening befort conversing with President Davis. This he indignantly denied, and by his bold demeanor disarmed suspicion and avoided arrest. Several weeks after the negro, who had the saddle in his possession, no longer fearing detection, openly rode the saddle about the neighborhood. It attracted the attention of Mr. O'Pry, who purchased it from the negro at a nominal figure. Mr. Feagan, hearing that the saddle belonged to Colonel Johnston, of President Davis's staff, wrote to him in reference to the matter. Colonel Johnston wrote in reply, telling him that he remembered all the circumstances, but that the saddle was the property of President Davis, and not his. Whereupon Mr. Feagin wrote to President Davis, who anawered his communication immediately, informing him of all the facts in the case, and described the saddle so accurately as to leave no doubt of its identity. In the meantime Rev. W. L. Jones, of Fort Valley, hearing of the historical interest attached to the saddle, purchased it from his brother-in-law, Mr. O'Pry, and presented it to the Fort Valley Library, where it now is. President Davis requested Mr. Feagin in his letter to secure the saddle for him if possible, as he highly prized it for the associations connected with it. It was given to him many years before the war in Texas, and he had ridden it on many memorable occasions during the late war.

We hope steps will be taken immediately to restore the saddle to its rightful owner.

We have been informed that there is a slight mistake in regard to the way Mr. Adam O'Pry obtained President Jeff Davis's saddle, an account of which is published above. In face of this information we publish the article, it being already in type, that the correction may be made. We know that there is no intention of doing injustice to any one. Our informant has no personal interest in the matter.

Land Frauds in Kansas.

WASHINGTON, December 9.—Land frauds of startling magnitude, recently discovered by the commissioner of the general land office in connection with the Osage Indian lands in Kansas, have led to an order by the commissioner suspending all cash entries made by single men since June 23, 1881, where the lands lie within the counties of Sumner, Harper, King and Comanche, Kansas. In his letter to the register and receiver in Wichita Commissioner McFarland says it has come to his knowledge that numbers of entries have been made in these counties by cowboys who immediately afterward turned the land over to their employers. The best farm lands and water privileges in the section named have been taken up in this way. The inspector's report shows that the entire county of Comanche and the greater part of the other three counties are under post and wire fence and that intending settlers are driven off by the stockmen. A thorough investigation of the circumstances is being made, and the commissioner says that if the allegations prove to be true the parties to the frauds will be criminally prosecuted and the recovered lands thrown open to bonafide settlers.

Three Oxen Killed.

From the Dalla, Ga., New Era.

On last Thursday, as Mr. W. H. Johns was crossing the bridge, known as Gann's bridge, over Pumpkinvine creek, the bridge gave way, tumbling his engine and four yoke of oxen down into the bed of the creek below. The engine was smashed to pieces, three oxen were killed instantly and the remainder badly injured. Fortunately no lives of persons were lost. Mr. Johns intends bringing suit aganst the county for damages.

Run Over and Killed.

Special to The Constitution.

SHREVEPORT, December 9.—James Sheridan, postmaster at Gloster station on the New Orleans Pacific railroad, was run over and killed last night by a freight train. He was standing near the train when it moved off, and the wind blew the corner of a shawl he had on against the wheel. It became entangled and threw him under the train.

MONKEYS AND SNAKES.

AN OLD SOAKER RELATES AN EXPERIENCE.

How He Wound up a Two Week's Spree—A Season in a Texas Guard House—Snakes, Monkeys, Devils and Dead Men's Faces—How it Feels to Have Delirium Tremens.

"Were the monkeys ever after me? Well, I should smile. After me; had me—had me down! Crawled up on top of me and ran all over my prostrate form!" and the old soaker drew a long breath and shuddered at the recollection.

"It was out in Texas," he continued. "Texas is the greatest state on the American continent for the jim-jams. More men will have delirium tremens in Texas in December and January, than in any other state in a whole year. Why, I have seen 'em two in a bed fighting devils until you couldn't rest. I was in San Antonio once—got roaring drunk there and stayed drunk two weeks. I was as limber as a rag for a whole week, and one day, just as I was entirely and completely broke, the police ran me in. The next morning I was not in a condition to be tried, and stayed in the lock-up all that day and night. Two days without liquor found me so restless that I could not sleep. I knew that my system needed to be let down gently from such a spree, and I had begged for whisky without success. I was cornered. I had no money, no whisky, no friends, and I saw distinctly what was sure to follow the sudden withdrawal of the stimulant that had kept me up for two weeks. I asked for morphine, and they said they wern't getting up funerals. I begged them for God's sake to give me anything that would save me from delirium tremens, but they laughed at me. I paced the floor of my cell all night. I felt weak, my hand trembled with nervousness, my feet and hands grew cold. All at once I felt like my body was swelling. My head felt as heavy as lead and half as big as a barrel. My legs felt as big around as a tree; I felt like I was sinking away. I got scared at my condition and then I began to imagine all sorts of things. I fell into a sort of reverie from which I was awakened by seeing the face of a dead man, with his sad, glassy eyes peering in through the grated door of the cell and just visible in the dim light. The face moved away slowly. Great heaven! I would recognize that face to-day if I were to see it, it made such a terrible impression on my mind. My cell was dark. I turned away from the door and in a minute I saw the face in one corner of the room. The head was on the body of a dog. It moved slowly from side to side and then I saw two. Then a third head came that was severed from the body and the blood was still visible about the throat. Then I saw a dozen heads and then the room was full of them and they all made at me. I gave a yell that was loud enough to have waked all San Antonio and made a break for the door. Do you think a man would come to my help? Not a man. I raced around that cell and nearly butted my brains out against the wall and finally made a dive for my blanket. I covered up my head but I covered up several other heads with it and I could feel their cold cheeks against mine. I yelled and howled like a madman. I beat at 'em with my blanket, but they would dodge me, and I couldn't hit one a square lick. Finally I made a terrible lunge, and fell on the floor almost insensible to everything. Then they left me, and I was congratulating myself on my escape and wondering how long it would be until daylight, when I suddenly like I had been fired from a cannon. A huge rattlesnake had slipped into the folds of my blanket, and was coiling himself about my neck. I felt for my knife only to remember that it had been taken from me when I was locked up. Then I caught the monster in my grasp, and while he hissed and rattled, and struck at me, I tore him from around my neck and dashed him toward the floor. He turned and standing on his tail reached deliberately up and bit me on the nose. I could see his little bead-like eyes as they twinkled devilishly, and could feel the keen fangs as they penetrated my flesh. My face began to swell and I felt weaker than ever and finally reeled and fell on the floor. A thousand snakes came through the walls and ran all over my body, and a big old monkey came and sat down on the floor close to my head and said that I would never get out of it alive, that old Satan was coming and would burn the house down and that I was to go to torment, and was to lay forever stretched stark naked on a red-hot table. I begged for mercy, and then I heard pistols firing outside and looked out and saw the police fighting the devil and his angels, and the snakes and the big monkey inside shouted to the devils to whoop 'em up' that I was in there and they had me. I asked the big monkey what they were after me for. He said that I was a refugee from justice and that while I had escaped the punishments of earth, I could not escape the punishments of perdition. I heard a footstep in the hall, and then the cell door opened and the benevolent face of a human being appeared. I flew into his arms. His face was to me the most beautiful I ever saw. I kissed where the crow's feet had gathered about his temples and thought that never did I see a mortal half so beautiful. As soon as he saw me he poured out a drachm of laudanum and a drachm of chloroform and I swallowed it at a gulp. In five minutes

SPRANG FROM MY PALLET

MY CHIN DROPPED ON MY BREAST.

They laid me down on my pallet and I slept twenty-four hours before I opened my eyes."

"What then?"

"I waked up all right, and when I knew what had happened I left San Antonio, and have never disgraced the town by entering it since that day."

"Never had 'em since?"

"Yes, I have had slight attacks but never [illegible] spend such a time as that spent in the [illegible]up at San Antonio. I have seen many a man have 'the horrors' and I tell you it is something to be dreaded. It is no laughing matter to the man who has the attack. Everything that he sees is real to him and no power of pen or words can give even the faintest idea of the mental torture that a man undergoes while pursued by monkeys and snakes. I would not blame any man for taking his own life to escape three day's suffering from delirium tremens."

"How does the trouble generally come first?"

"After a protracted debauch in which the inebriate has surrendered himself with a sort of insane fury to drink for days or weeks and the brain, or stomach, or both, are stimulated into inflammation, or a state bordering on it. Drinks become disgusting and cannot be retained, or sometimes they are withheld, for are unattainable. The face is flushed and turgid, the lips intensely red, the head hot, the tongue furred, or of a fiery redness, the appetite gone, the thirst extreme and the pulse excited, full and tense. When you get in that fix, you are ready to see snakes in your boots."

Then the old soaker wiped his rose-colored nose and the reporter proceeded around the corner.

NEW YORK, December 9—Share speculation opened dull and about steady on yesterday's closing figures. In early trade the market was weak, and under the lead of Northern Pacific and Denver and Rio Grande prices fell off ⅛@1¾ per cent. This was followed by an advance of 2⅛ per cent in Omaha preferred, 1¼ per cent in Northwest, 1 per cent in Omaha common, and ⅛@⅞ per cent in the remainder of the list, the latter in St. Paul. Shortly after 11 o'clock a reaction of ⅛ per cent occurred, the latter in Northern Pacific preferred, after which the market became strong, and in the early part of the afternoon recorded an advance ranging from ½@2⅜ per cent, in which Northern Pacific preferred, St. Paul, Northwest, Union Pacific and Delaware, Lackawanna and Western were most conspicuous. Subsequently the list receded ⅛@1⅛ per cent, the latter in Union Pacific and Denver and Rio Grande, but the late trade again sold up ⅛@1⅛ per cent, Minnesota, St. Louis and Northern Pacific leading the improvement. During the latter half of the last hour the market, although active, was weak, and dropped ⅛@2⅛ per cent, Northern Pacific preferred and common, Union Pacific, Western Union and Delaware, Lackawanna and Western suffering most severely in the decline; the Omaha stocks, however, were strong, preferred advancing 3⅝ per cent, and common 2¾ per cent to the close. In the last hour Northern Pacific preferred sold down exdividend 11 per cent, and Union Pacific 1¾ per cent. The market closed weak compared with yesterday's closing figures. Prices are irregular, Omaha preferred being 5, common 2⅛, Northwest 1, and Milwaukee and Lake Shore preferred 1⅛ per cent higher, while Oregon and Trans-Continental is 1¾, Union Pacific 3¾, Western Union 1⅛, Union Pacific preferred 12⅞ per cent lower. Transactions aggregated 415,000 shares.

Great Sale of Business, Manufacturing and Residence Lots in

JACKSON, BUTTS CO, GA.

ON THURSDAY, THE 14th DAY OF DECEMBER 1882, commencing at 11 o'clock sharp, I will sell, on the premises, at Jackson, the county site of Butts county, Georgia, on the line of the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad,

132 BUSINESS, RESIDENCE AND MANUFACTURING LOTS,

Lying around and near the new depot of said Railroad, having wide streets and convenient alleys, a great number of the lots fronting on the right of way, suitable for Lumber Yards, Mills and Manufactories of all kinds.

The lots all lie very well, and many have fine forest shade trees on them.

Jackson is the county seat of Butts county, surrounded by a highly productive country and in one of the finest fruit-growing sections of Middle Georgia; and is a high and perfectly healthy point, abundantly supplied with the purest and best freestone water.

It has good society, churches and schools; and the great through line of railroad just completed, has given the place a lively, pushing, business aspect.

Every lot offered will be sold squarely on its merits to the highest bidder, with a liberal privilege of adjoining lots

The Railroad from Griffin to Jackson will doubtless be built at an early day.

The E. T., Va. & Ga. R. R. will sell tickets for this sale, from any point, at two cents per mile, each way.

Trains leave Atlanta and arrive at Jackson as follows:

Passenger train leaves 3:00 p. m 13th December, arrive 5:08 p. m. same day.

Passenger train leaves 1:35 a. m. 14th December, arrive 4:50 a m. same day.

Freight train leaves 6:00 a. m. 14th December, arrive 11:25 a. m. same day

Trains leave Macon and arrive at Jackson as follows:

Passenger train leaves 4:15 p. m. 13th December, arrive 7:17 p m. same day.

Local Freight leaves 6:15 a. m. 14th December, arrive 11:10 a. m same day.

Passenger train leaves 8:15 a. m. 14th December, arrive 10:08 a m same day.

Terms: Half cash and the remainder in 12 months at 8 per cent, or all cash, if preferred.

CITY NEWS.

THE REGULAR RECORD OF CURRENT LOCAL EVENTS.

The Day's Doing in Public Offices—The Record of the Courts, the Railroads and Hotels—Capitol Jottings—Real Estate Operations—Improvements—Gossip of all Kinds.

The burglar is on the rampage again.

The coal dealer reaped a harvest yesterday.

Atlanta is having quite a variety of weather.

The station house last night was full of plain drunks.

The real estate men are arranging for heavy work this spring.

There was but little work in the real estate line yesterday.

Judge Hammond will hold court commencing to-morrow.

The members of the legislature have all left for their homes.

The freight traffic just now is heavy with all of the railroads

The city hall park is no more a favorite resort. The weather is too cold.

The stock men were busy all day yesterday and their sales were large and many.

Police court Monday morning will be long and tedious, but the receipts will be large.

The sale of hook and ladder house on Broad street will give capitalists a rare chance to invest.

A street hack collided with a freight engine on the Whitehall crossing yesterday. The engine was not hurt.

To-night at the Fifth Baptist church Rev. Virgil Norcross will deliver a special sermon to medical students

A Stone mountain man of advanced ideas says, "Every town should have at least one liberry and a liberty stable."

The investigation of Marshal Longstreet's accounts still progresses with no developments of crookedness reported.

The committee of the Hebrew congregation, appointed to establish a fair, met yesterday and determined not to hold it until the first Monday in January, so as not to interfere with the Art Loan exhibition.

The cornet playing of Mr. Charles E. Klugel at the Art Loan has justly been much admired. Mr. Klugel is a first-class band leader, and is here to see if he can get the leadership of the Atlanta band. If he can, he will bring several men who are first-class mechanics as well as solo musicians.

The District Court.

In the district court yesterday the balance of sentence was suspended in the cases of Daniel Corley, Lonnie Stone and E. T. Eason, convicted of violating the revenue laws.

The City Court.

In the city court yesterday, Judge Clark presiding, the day was occupied in the trial of the case of Dorsett & McElwreath vs. the Atlanta Street Railroad company, suit for damages. The case was not concluded.

A Small Blaze.

An alarm of fire was turned in about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon from box forty-six, located at the corner of Wheat and Collins streets, and was caused by the burning of a chimney in a house on the corner of Collins and Houston streets. No damage was done.

A Genuine Surprise Party.

Wednesday last was Mr. David Mayer's birthday, and that evening a number of his friends determined to give him a genuine surprise at his residence. About dark nearly one hundred of his friends gathered at Mr. Steinheimer's residence, and each armed with a basket filled with everything good to eat, proceeded in a body to Mr. Mayer's residence where they were received with that genuine hearty welcome which is so prominent a characteristic of Mr. Mayer. The company made the evening a pleasant one.

A Petition for Pardon.

For some days a petition has been in circulation asking the governor to pardon Captain Ed Cox, who is now serving out a life sentence for the killing of Colonel Robert A. Alston The petition was signed by a large number of citizens, a majority of the senate and house, and a majority of the penitentiary commit ee. On Friday the petition was sent to Governor Stephens. The governor is now busily engaged with the work left for his attention by the legislature, and cannot consider the matter for a few days By the end of next week, however, he expects to be able to give the petition such careful consideration as its importance demands. Captain Cox is at the Dorsa coal mine, and Mrs. Cox and the children are at Decatur.

"Cad The Tom Boy."

As the above play, and its claim to any particular merit has been spoken of in THE CONSTITUTION in previous issues, it can only be said, that the plot of the piece is laid in New York city, and Miss Carrie Swain, personates one of the little oppressed gamins that patrol the streets, and arises from an abused domestic to a young lady of wealth. The play is simply a series of scenes, connected by a mere thread of a story for the purpose of giving her the bright little things to do, which she does so well. No further mention will be necessary as to her acting, singing, dancing, her escape down a telegraph pole, her jump into the river, swimming out with a child, but we will give the "solid fact" as to her playing here. "Cad" was produced Friday and Saturday nights, and at matinee Saturday afternoon, and to large and very enthusiastic audiences each time.

Stealing and Trading Watches.

J. W. Hawkins, a darkey who recently came to Atlanta from Covington, is in the calaboose awaiting trial for larceny. Since becoming a resident of Atlanta Hawkins has been working in Jack & Holland's packing room. Several days ago a lady's gold watch was stolen from a show case in the sample room, but the detective, who was employed to work up the case, could not find anything pointing towards the guilty party. Day before yesterday another watch, a heavy gold one, was placed in the show case for the purpose of entrapping, if possible, the thief. The bait took but in a novel way. The thief liked the appearance of the large gold watch best, and placed the small one back in the show case and took the large one His arrest was made by Captain Bagby soon after the second theft. Hawkins's departure from Covington was caused by an attempt on his part to kill a man in that place and he is wanted here for the offense.

From the Old North State to, Atlanta.

We are glad to announce the arrival of Major T. H. Blacknall and family, to our city to make it his future home. The major has purchased in West End, adjoining the lot of Mr. E Hammond, on which he proposes building a handsome residence in the spring, he will occupy Mr Hammond's place, until he builds. We extend a hearty welcome to such enterprising men as Major Blacknall. He will make Atlanta the General Southern Headquarters for Blackwell's Durham Tobacco

Below we give extract from the News and Observer, of Raleigh, N. C. We saw registered at the Yarboro house yesterday. Major T. H. Blacknall and family, en route to Atlanta, which city the major proposes to make his future headquarters as general agent for the Southern States for Blackwell's Durham Tobacco We regret to lose such a live and energetic business man as Major Blacknall He is a most enterprising and public spirited man, and will be a valuable acquisition to any state, while his interesting family will no less be an important addition to the social life of their adopted city.

[illegible] the party of Ohio editors who [illegible] before last, took a good look [illegible]guidance of Colonel Sam [illegible]rt and one or two others, [illegible] seen of Atlanta in the [illegible]ved. Nearly all of the [illegible] with pencil and note [illegible] many of them will [illegible]tails of the incidents of the trip. Just before noon the editors, about 125 strong, accompanied by the ladies of the party and others, to the total number of nearly a hundred and seventy-five, called at the executive mansion to meet Governor Stephens. Colonel Small presented Mr. Mack, of Sandusky, and the other members of the party were then presented. Mr. Mack made a few remarks addressed to Mr. Stephens, stating that it was the desire of the party to call upon and pay their respects to a man of whom they had heard so much all their lives. Governor Stephens expressed his pleasure at meeting the editors and warmly welcomed them. He conversed freely and all who were present were made to feel entirely at home. After leaving the mansion the party returned to the Kimball and dined, and at 2:40 yesterday afternoon left for Savannah via the Central railroad. They will go through to Jacksonville.

ART LOAN.

The bric-a-brac collection consist of Major Mims's book case and collection, J. P. Stevens & Co.'s exhibit, Freeman & Crankshaw's exhibit, Schuttys's exhibit from Cincinnati, Mr, Dreyfus's collection of art, besides many pieces from different persons placed in different parts of the room. One case contains many pieces of beauty and especial interest, brought from Athens by Miss Mattie Grady. It is between the stevens and the Freeman and Crankshaw exhibits, and is well worth a visit to the library.

During this week Mr. Bradley will be in general charge of the entire exhibition. The selection and arrangement of all the pictures have been largely his work, and he has won the highest praise from the officers and board of directors.

Friday afternoon will be devoted to a dress ball for children under fifteen years of age. The children's ball will be in charge of Mrs. Jack Johnson, Mrs. H. W. Grady Mrs. R. B. Bullock, Mrs Willie Reagan, Mrs. Walter Taylor, Mrs. Julius Brown, Mrs. Darwin Jones, and Misses King, Hammond, Walker and Wadley.

On Friday night at nine o'clock the full dress subscription ball will take place. Tickets to the ball can be obtained from Messrs. Jack Johnson, H.C. Glenn, O. A. Sanders and P. H. Snook. The tickets will be $5 each. No one will be allowed upon the floor except in full dress. Spectators will find seats on the second floor. The ladies reception committee will consist of Mrs. General Lewis. Mrs. Judge Jackson, Mrs. W. H. Inman, Mrs. Elchburg, Mrs Dr. King, Mrs. Dr Johnson, Mrs. J. C. Kimball, Mrs Governor Conley, Mrs. Harry Jackson, Mrs. N. P. T. Finch, and Mrs. L. H Clark.

The board of directors will constitute the reception committee of gentlemen. All the arrangements have been perfected to make this one of the most elegant balls of the season.

The ticket of admission will entitle holders to seats at the banquet.

On Wednesday evening an entertainment will be given that will include the best singers and recitationists in the state. One of the singers has not been heard in Atlanta, and it is thought that her appearance will be a real sensation. The full programme will be given on Tuesday morning.

Among the specially and justly admired pictures are two by Mrs. James H Powers, of Richmond. They are a scene in Munich, and on the upper James.

Mrs. Gregory's portrait of little Mamie Law has won the admiration of every visitor to the Art Loan this week for its exquisite, dimpled, baby loveliness.

The Art Loan will positively close next Saturday.

TABLE TALK.

A Glance at the Market and What it Affords—The Shad Season.

The shad season will probably open in Atlanta to-morrow, and the occasion will be hailed with delight. Something is needed to give a little variety to the appearance of the fish stands. The eye is tired looking at big red snappers flanked by mullet and sheepshead, blue fish and trout. Shad are expected from Jacksonville and May Port in a day or two, and the yearning for a change in fish will doubtless be satisfied. It is probable that prices will run high and fancy figures will be charged at first. The markets of the eastern cities can send the first fruits of the waters, and will doubtless succeed in making such a drain as to run up prices at points even this near the fisheries.

During the last week one dealer has been making an experiment in oysters. He had a pressure brought to bear to get him to keep extra fine oysters, but he was sure that such oysters as were spoken of could not be sold. He, however, ordered some New York counts and readily sold them at fifty cents per quart. He says that he could have sold them at a dollar a quart as just easily. He will double-s gradually go up on the price, as he does not consider the present margin of profit large enough Prices in fish and oysters have not changed. Oysters are from 35 to 50 cents, and fish are ten cents for snappers, trout, sheepshead and bluefish, and six cents for mullet.

Game has been scarce. The restaurants have been very well supplied, but the dealers have had nothing but quails, which retailed at twenty cents. One restaurant has had an especially good lot of wild turkeys from up the State road and in Kentucky, but the prices were fancy and the turkeys were served in the restaurant.

Live poultry is not in demand now. Chickens are slow sale at twenty five cents. Dressed chickens sell at fifteen cents per pound and dressed turkeys are selling at from seventeen and a half to eighteen. Eggs are selling at thirty-five cents per dozen. Butter is plentiful at the usual prices Jersey retails at fifty cents: good Tennessee sells at from thirty five to forty. Beef and pork have not changed in price, although beef is some scarcer and higher at wholesale. The retail price has not been changed.

The fruit market is very well supplied. Good oranges retail at fifty cents per dozen, and good apples retail at fifty cents a peck. At retail on the stands the prices of the leading articles are as follows: bananas $1.50 to $2 per bunch; malaga grapes, 40 cents, catawba grapes, 20 cents per pound; California pears, five to ten cents each; apples, fifteen to forty cents per dozen; lemons, thirty five to forty cents per dozen.

FINDLEY AND BEARDEN.

A Motion For New Trial in the Case of the Fannin County Conspirators.

Yesterday in the United States circuit court Judge McCay heard a motion for new trial in the case of W. W. Findley and A. J. Bearden, two of the three men who were, several weeks ago, convicted of conspiracy against John A. Stewart, a United States deputy collector of internal revenue. The case is one of the most interesting that the mountain warfare has ever afforded. One night in April, 1880, the house of Stewart, in Fannin county, was set on fire and burned by a party of men and Stewart was fired upon. He followed and claims to have recognized several of the men who were in the party, and with a remarkable persistence has sought to bring them to justice. James Findley, W. W. Findley, and A. J. Bearden were tried two or three months ago and convicted. The trial lasted several days and was concluded with a verdict of guilty about ten o'clock at night. By some means the prisoners had become possessed of pistols and when they were being taken from the court room drew their weapons and made a desperate dash for freedom Only one, James Findley, succeeded in making good his escape. He was a young man, and the manner of his escape, its boldness and success, was more like the doings of a dime novel hero than the act of a real flesh and blood individual. After his escape Findley made his way into the mountains and has not been recaptured. His latest exploit was a bold and successful dash for liberty when partly surrounded by a party of deputy marshels. In this pitched battle he received a wound, so it is said. The details of the occurrence are still fresh in the public memory.

Since the trial W. W. Findley and Bearden have been confined in jail here. In the motion for new trial which was heard yesterday they were represented by George N. Lester, George S. Thomas and W. F. Findley The arguments were lengthy and exhaustive. The grounds advanced for the motion were that the indictment was defective by reason of the fact that J. C. Reynolds, who acted as foreman, was not the Reynolds who was drawn and served according to the record, and that the name of J. C. Reynolds was not in the jury box. That the indictment was otherwise defective, and that the verdict was contrary to evidence, and that newly discovered evidence could be produced for the defense. Judge Lester argued upon the idea that his clients were not at the burning, and even if they had been there was no evidence that they had conspired to prevent Stewart from seizing illicit stills. That they might possibly, under portions of the testimony, be convicted of arson, but in no way was it shown that they were guilty of a conspiracy. After hearing the motion, Judge McCay announced that he would take the case under consideration and render his decision later. Findley and Bearden were remanded to jail.

A Word From Mr. Seals on the Election.

TO MY FELLOW CITIZENS—Though a defeated candidate, I am nevertheless a most grateful one for the universal kindness and esteem which was shown me everywhere, and for the exceedingly complimentary vote which I received after a brief campaign of ten days. It is the more gratifying, too, because every ballot was purely voluntary. I did not purchase a single vote, did not hire a carriage nor vehicle of any kind, had no one at the polls to represent me. I formed no combination of any kind, not even with any of the candidates. I was not at the polls in person, and there was therefore no influence whatever at work in my behalf on that day, and many people I learn had much difficulty in finding a Seals ticket. At 10 o'clock in the morning I had retired from the field in despair and general disgust, for I discovered around each poll such a thorough and complete net work of political machinery that I did not see how I was to get a dozen votes. But when I saw the result next day I took fresh hope for my country, for it demonstrated the fact that these corrupt methods may yet be crushed out; and I now see that the result might have been different this time, for enough people wanted to vote for Seals to have elected him, but they were "afraid he couldn't be elected," because, as the Herald kindly says, the race had already been made up between the other two candidates. Hundreds of my personal friends, therefore, failed to register, and 500 who did failed to vote. Many of these would have voted for me. I am therefore deeply grateful for the widspread sympathy in my behalf throughout the city, and though I shall never again have the presumption to offer my services to my people, I shall always love them. This was my first and last experience in a city election, and with sentiments of the highest esteem for each and all of my fellow citizens, I am most respectfully.

A BIG BONANZA IN TOYS!

JOHN RYAN

The regulator of prices, has just made a big strike, having bought the entire stock of a large importer of Toys in New York at twenty cents on the dollar, he is prepared to offer Toys at prices that seem ridiculous. The stock of Toy is so large that had to get an extra ware-house to store them in, not having enough room in his mammoth emporium on Whitehall street, he has struck a new idea in the Toy line, that of

JOHN RYAN

BARGAIN COUNTERS

He has TWENTY Large Bargain Toy Counters stacked with every imaginable kind of Toys that is made. To see this immense display alone is well worth a visit whether you wish to buy or not. The Bargain Toy Counters will be replenished from day to day as the trade demands.

This is unquestionably the largest Toy stock ever seen in Georgia. John Ryan simply challenges the world. There is not a Toy made that is not on exhibition at this wonderful store.

The bargain counters have not a toy on them that is not worth less than four times the price being asked. It is simply wonderful and unparalleled.

Velocipedes, Drums, Wagons, China and Glass-ware, Dolls, Trumpets, Guns, Hobby Horses, Tally-Ho, Dexters, Mechanical Toys, Vases, Mugs, Guns, Swords, and everything known to the TOY TRADE.

An extra force of men have been engaged to sell Toys alone. Think not of buying a single article until you see what Ryan can do. It will make you laugh to see the difference in the prices asked elsewhere and what they are being sold for here.

John Ryan is determined to do the Toy business from now until Cnristmas if goods have to be given away. Call early and get the first-choice at Charleston Music Festival.

What "I. E. O.," the correspondent of the Columbia South Carolina Register said of Atlanta's representatives: "But what shall I say of Amadeo—"the young Paganini of the South"—as he was enthusiastically proclaimed? A bright, healthy young boy only eight years old! And yet, what a marvel, what a prodigy! He essays recondite solos which severely tax the skill of old and experienced violinists and renders them with precision, feeling and power. The idea of this mere boy playing without flaw and with proper expression De Beriot's Seventh Concerto! And yet he did it, thereby producing the wildest enthusiasm among his hearers, who could scarcely credit their senses. Not only did he perform difficult solos with spirit and effect, but he played at sight the exacting first violin parts in the orchestra, eliciting the commendation of the entire body of singers and players. He possesses the style of an artist and does nothing in a boyish way. He appears to have a just conception of the composer's thoughts and reproduces them with fidelity and artistic skill. This remarkable boy violinist was born in Berlin, and his careful training is due to the untiring attention of his gifted father, who ranks among the profoundest musicians of the day. But enough of this. No description can do justice to Amadeo's powers. He must be seen and heard to be appreciated.

Now let me pay my respects to some of the more notable participants in the festival. While it is admitted that the chorus and the orchestra were remarkably efficient, considering the inadequate practice they had, and that some of the soloists acquitted themselves with credit, had not Professor Schultze, Mrs. Von der Schulzeand their son Amadeo contributed their services, the festival would not have been the success it was. This highly gifted musical triumvirate came from Atlanta, and they return to the "Gate City" crowned with honors. Mrs. Schulze was educated in Germany, and for a long time was a favorite pupil of the great Rubinstein, who pronounced her one of the greatest living women pianists. This verdict was affirmed and reaffirmed by the throngs of listeners, in the Academy of Music. In her rendition of Mendelssohn's celebrated concerto in G minor she displayed marvelous power and brilliancy. Her technique is faultless, her octave playing clean, her trills bird-like, and her bravura playing really artistic. Her bright intelligence beams out in her sparkling touch of the keys and they ring out the meaning of the composer as she interprets it Her most striking characteristic is power, and she forcibly reminds one of Rubinstein. She is indeed a rare woman and an exalted niche in the temple of fame awaits her.

DR. BARRY'S MOTHER'S COMFORTER, A NEW REMEDY.

A BOON TO SUFFERING WOMEN, ESPECIALLY adapted to the troubles of pregnancy.

Used during the last two months of pregnancy, it relieves all sense of tightness and weight so annoying in this condition

It relieves cramps, false pains and nervousness, calms the movements of the infant and promotes comfort and rest at night.

It greatly ameliorates the pangs of child-birth, shortens labor and prevents after pains and facilitates recovery,

It regulates the monthly periods and promptly relieves painful menstruation

It is a superior remedy for Neuralgias, Convulsions and other troubles connected with Uterine and Ovarian diseases.

It acts gently upon the kidneys, relieves irritation of the bladder, regulates the bowels, invigorates the appetite and promotes digestion.

BARRY'S MOTHER'S COMFORTER is put up in boxes, the wrappers containing full direction for use.

If taken as prescribed will effect all that is claimed for it, and affords such comfort and relief as to convince all who use it of its inestimable value.

Barry's Comforter is a plant not known to our Pharmacopoeia, but is indigenous to the Southern States and is devoid of any danger whatever

It may be had at Howard & Candler's, and other Druggists in the city of Atlanta.

MEETINGS.

Central Lodge No. 28 I. O. O. F.

Central Lodge No. 28 I. O. O. F. requests the attendance of members at a meeting Tuesday evening, the 12th instant, at which time Conyers Lodge No. 92, of Conyers, Ga., in the celebration of their fourth anniversary, will visit said lodge. A cordial invitation is extended to sister lodges. 1t

PERSONAL.

Colonel Geo. M. Trayler has returned to the Kimball.

Mr. I. S. Wood, Jr., of Savannah, is at the Kimball.

Mrs W. A. Riach, of Wilmington, N. C., is visiting Mrs Sheehan, South Pryor street.

Miss Cheek, Miss Dick and Miss Whitlock, of Marietta, were at the Kimball yesterday.

Hon. L. B. Sheldon, of Mobile, is in the city, attending his brother, Wm. B., who is very sick.

Mrs. Alice Eve Grizzard, of Galveston, Texas, is visiting her sister, Mrs. A. D. Wamaling, of this city.

Captain C. A. Sheldon, of Greensboro, Ala., is in the city on a visit to his son, at 109 West Baker treet.

Judge D. J. Dillon, a prominent and well known citizen of Brunswick, has been in Atlanta for the past day or two.

Judge and Mrs. W. W. Montgomery, Mr. Frank H. Miller and Mrs Wm. K. Miller, of Augusta, are at the Kimball.

Hon. F. C. McAfee and wife, of Cumming, Ga., are spending a few days in the city, with their son-in-law, Captain E. M. Roberts.

Rev. Robert Sloss, D D., an eminent divine of Indiana, will preach at the first Presbyterian church to-day. He is the guest of G. H. Coffin.

Mr. Ben Stern, business manager Old Shipmates company, is a guest at the Kimball. Mr. Stern is accompanied by his charming little wife.

E. D. Bickley wishes to inform his friends that he is "back home" with his old house, A. O. M. Gay & Co., the reliable and popular clothiers, 37 Peachtree street. 3t4

Mr. Ben Stern, business agent "Old Shipmates" combination, is in the city perfecting arrangements for the production, at DeGive's opera house, Friday and Saturday nights, and matinee Saturday afternoon, of Morris's comedy drama, "Old Shipmates," by Mr. Frank Mordaunt and his excellent company. As "Old Shipmates" is known to many Atlanta theater habitues, we will only say that it has been pronounced by the New York Herald, Sun, Star, Times and Post, "one of the best entertainments of the season."

The Circuit Court.

In the United States circuit court yesterday, Judge McCay presiding, the following cases were dismissed for want of prosecution. American Cotton Tie Company vs. John D. Frazier; Georgia State Lottery and Mrs. William Wilson vs. W. A. Wilson; Pittsburg Locomotive and Car Works vs. Cherokee Railroad Company et al; J. A. Beeks vs. The Life Association of America. In the case of United States vs. William A. Hansard, L. B. Crowand others, an order was passed making Elijah C. McAfee a party. James Smith, of DeKalb county, entered a plea of guilty to a charge of illicit retailing and was sentenced to 30 days in jail, $100 fine and costs. Court adjourned to meet Tuesday week

Fancy Dress and Masque Ball.

A select fancy dress and masque ball will be given at Kirkwood on Thursday evening next by the "M. D. C." The attendance is limited to twenty-four couples, and the invitations are already issued. The affair promises to be one of the most brilliant of the season. The floor managers are Messrs. H. G. Northern, Jr., S. A. Swann, F. B. Glenn, Charles D. Tuller and S. J. Holland. Chaperones: Mrs. J. B. Wade. Mrs. J. W. Fears, Mrs. James W. Warren, Mrs. J. B. Morgan. The invitations are truly æsthetic.

Obstructing the Sidewalk.

Mr. Frank E. Block, the candy manufacturer, was before Recorder Glenn yesterday charged by Colonel George T. Fry with obstructing the sidewalk with boxes. Mr. Block stated that it was necessary to his business to have the goods placed on the sidewalk for shipment. Colonel Fry held that he might use three feet but that he had exceeded that amount. The recorder fined Mr. Block five dollars.

A Fire at Gainesville.

Night before last a building at Gainesville, owned by Mr. Thomas Wilson and occupied by Charles Lamkey as a saddlery establishment, was destroyed by fire. The loss was not considerable.

SOCIAL GOSSIP.

THE WEEK AND ITS ENTERTAINMENTS.

The People Here and Elsewhere—The Marriage Season in Full Blast—Social Clubs and Reunions. Rumors of Stage and Footlight Happiness—Fashion Notes—Women's Ways.

While there has been but one or two notable events in the city during the week, still there has been a good deal of vitality among society people. One or two prominent weddings, good entertainments at the opera house, the number of strangers in the city, the many attractions at the Art Loan, and the end of the session of the general assembly, have all contributed to city life pleasures. "Coming events cast their shadows before." Society begins to plume its feathers for the gaities of several coming weddings, and of Christmas, with its family reunions, joyous entertainments and cordial receptions.

UNITED HEARTS AND HANDS.

CHANCELLOR—WYNN.

In Thomasville, on the morning of the 5th, Mr. Chancellor, of Columbus, was married to Miss Wynn, of Thomasville. The ceremony was performed by the bride's father, Rev. A. M. Wynn. Miss Wynn is a popular and cultured young lady, and a daughter of the Rev. Mr. Wynn, pastor of Thomasville Methodist church. Mr. Chancellor is a promising gentlemen of Columb us.

COLEMAN—DICKERSON.

CANTON, December 6—At 6:30 o'clock this evening at the Methodist church, Dr. W. L. Coleman, of Jasper, Ga., and Miss Mary Dickerson, of this place, were united in marriage by Rev C. M. McClure. Ushers—Samuel Tate and David A. McNairn. The church was beautifully decorated and the evening passed off quite pleasantly. The groom is a noble gentlemen and an excellent physician—the bride one of our loveliest and most beautiful young ladies.

WHATLEY—RUSSELL.

On December 6th, 10 o'clock, a. m., at the residence of the bride's father, in Coweta county, Rev. James Stacey, officiating, Colonel P. S. Whatley, of Newnan, was married to Miss Mary Russell, a young lady who since her debut in society has been a reigning belle. Colonel Whatley is a talented young lawyer and is happy in his new life. The groom's mother gave a magnificent dinner to the happy pair and friends. Last night they were again entertained and feasted in a princely style at the residence of Dr. A. J. Lyndon.

JONES—HARRIS.

ATHENS, December 6—Married this morning, at the residence of Mr. James A. Carlton, Miss Sallie Harris, of Athens, and Mr. Louis Jones, of Kirkwood, Rev. C. D. Campbell, pastor of the Baptist church, officiating. Mrs. Jones is a daughter of Colonel Eugene Harris, formerly of Madison, and has lived in Athens several years; is a graduate of the Lucy Cobb institute, has numbers of friends and relatives here, whose good wishes attend her. Mr. Jones is a former Athens man, was for several years an assistant in the scientific department of the university.

GREENBAUM—JOEL.

Special to The Constitution.

MILLEDGEVILLE, December 6—On Sunday last the Rabbi from Macon married Mr. Greenbaum, of Savannah, to Miss Hattie Joel. They were married by the Israelitish ceremony. Mr. Y. Joel and wife, at whose home the marriage took place, gave a magnificent entertainment. Last night Rev Patillo performed the marriage ceremony between Mr. Charles Sewell, of Baltimore, and Miss Mary Tinsley, of this city, in presence of a select company of friends and relatives, at the residence of Captain Howard Tinsley, the bride's father. The happy couple left on the 9 o'clock p. m. train for their future home in Baltimore.

SHELOR—SWAIN.

Married, on Wednesday evening, December 6th, at the residence of the bride's father, Colonel John W. Swain, of Gordon county, Georgia, Mr Will M. Shelor to Miss Ada E. Swain. The bride is one of the most popular and accomplished young ladies in north Georgia, and the groom is an industrious and progressive young farmer of Gordon.

The attendants were Miss Eloise Butler, of South Carolina, Miss Sudie Hunt, of Rome, Georgia, Miss Sudie Shelor, of Gordon county, and Miss Willie Ramey, of Rome, Georgia. After the short but chaste and impressive ceremony was performed by Rev. A. S. Tatum, a select company of friends and relatives repaired to the residence of Mrs. Shelor, where an elegant repast was served, and friendly congratulations were offered to the happy young married couple.

GILBERT—ROUSSCAN.

On Thursday, the 7th inst., one of the most pleasing incidents of the season took place at the residence of Mrs. M. J. Gilbert, No. 100 Walton street, the occasion being the marriage of her daughter, Miss Lila H. Gilbert and Mr. James P. Roussean, of North Carolina. Miss Mollie Greene and Miss Kane were attendants to the bride, and Messrs. John Blount and Frank Sims assistants to the groom. The costumes and toilets of the bride and bridesmaids were most recherche. The Rev. Father McMahon, pastor of St. Peter's and St. Paul's church, performed the marriage ceremony after which in a short but very kind address he wished Mr. and Mrs. Rousscan contentmeut and happiness as their future lot. The numerous friends of both bride and bridegroom, who were present, testified to the high esteem in which both were held, by their hearty and oft repeated wishes of a bon voyage over the unknown sea of futurity. All present were then entertained most elegantly by the bride's mother, while the newly married couple made preparations to start for the home of Mr. Rousscan, where after spending a few days, they will visit Cincinnati, Chicago and other northern cities.

The Art Loan.

As the days of the Art Loan draw to an end, large numbers gather within the walls of the Library building, to examine, to study, and be pleased at what they see there. And all they see is calculated to multiply the innocent enjoyments of life, to dignify the aspect of society, and by a moral influence to refine the manners, and elevate the character. Visitors may not find these pictures showing the varied and lofty invention of Raffael, the harmonious brilliancy of Titian's colouring, Guido's never-tiring sweetness, the opulent fertility of the magnificent Reubens, or the ever verdant imagination of Claude, but they will find many simulations of what are bright and beautiful, and will feel and learn from them the extent and majesty of the power of painting. At the Art Loan can be seen pictures, which, through the senses awakens the imagination, reanimates the dead, acts over before us the great deeds of history, realizes to our eyes the most glorious visions of poetry, in short on a few feet of canvas can be seen the unbounded vastness of nature's scenes, the cheering breath of her airs and heavens, her changes of season, and "glad vicissitudes of night and day." There are various departments in which are collections of fans, laces and embroideries, of decorated china, Japanese decorations, bric-a-brac, old-fashioned articles; historical, etc., etc., and a great deal to see. It is a surprise that so excellent an exhibition has been gotten up in our city, and all should take advantage of an opportunity to see it, for it teaches one to feel his own capacity for purer and better delights than those of sense, it will dignify his nature, and will tend to the cultivation of the pleasure of the mind. All should see this exhibition, make a visit to the rooms of the library, it will invigorate the mind and enlarge the conception. Visit them and you will find practical information, rational amusement, and intellectual gratification; it will insinuate a taste for the most innocent of your pleasures, will impart a new charm, and a new attraction, to that assemblage of secure and hallowed enjoyments which we call home. A large number have visited the Art Loan exhibition—many being our own citizens—many intelligent ladies and gentlemen from other cities and towns, and there has been but one opinion expressed—all are delighted, and speak of the exhibition in the most flattering terms.

An excellent restaurant in the building, under charge of the library, offers every temptation to the palate, and at a reasonable price. In a few days now the exhibition will close. Do not fail to see it, and in the place of pleasant memories in the future have only regrets to express that you neglected witnessing so excellent and beautiful an exhibition. Aside from the gratification of seeing such a number and variety of artists which requires a catalogue of forty-seven pages to enumerate the large number of pleasant ladies and gentlemen, our own citizens, as well as strangers, the sparkling conversation, the sweet music, the graceful dance and elegant refreshments, all combine in causing the Art Loan position to be the most attractive entertainment [illegible] city.

Concert at Marietta.

Nichol's hall, in Marietta, on Monday night, contained a nice audience, assembled to enjoy a concert given for the benefit of St. James Episcopal church. Professor Wurmer and his band, of Atlanta, was in attendance, and furnished some of the excellent music of the evening. We will not speak of the sweet solos and excellent chorus, so charming in their renditions. Mrs Dykeman and Mr. R. H. McCrystal, whose rich, well trained musical voices are well known in Atlanta, added greatly to the enjoyment of the evening. Mrs. Mary Madden, of this city, also participated, and her rendition of classic and other kinds of music on the piano, require no words of commendation. She is always listened to with pleasure, and gives the utmost satisfaction. The concert was an unqualified success.

New Year's.

Already some of our society people are making preparations for New Years, with its calls. Numbers have settled the question for themselves, that the confection offered will be of a simple sort. A few cold meats, as boned turkey, jellied tongue, pickled oysters and sandwiches, in the dining room, will be offered with tea or coffee, as one pleases, but a too profuse hospitality is not approved. Some of the ladies have already arranved to have rally around them a number of charming young ladies, and so end le premier jour de l'an in a blaze of triumph. Other ladies intend to win success by the genial welcome and the good impression they will convey to each of their guests.

An Event in Chattanooga.

Notice has been received in this city, that the Chattanooga Cadets are resolved to make their fair Christmas week, the event of the season. The reception committee will be composed of representative men of the city. The attendants will be twenty-five young ladies. Among the novelties to be offered will be a competitive drill between the Broom Brigade and Cadets; also a competitive drill between the members of the company for a gold medal offered by the captain.

Charming Reception.

Rev. Dr. Harrison, this distinguished gentleman, spent the past week in Atlanta, the guest of Mr W. L. Peel, Peachtree street. He preached twice on Sunday to such large congregations that extra seats had to be provided to accommodate the crowds. On Monday evening a charming reception was given in his house by Mr. and Mrs. Peel, at which many of his friends and admirers had the pleasure of meeting him again.

GENERAL MENTION.

Rev. H. F. Buckner, D.D., for more than thirty years a missionary of the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist convention, died at his home December 4th.

From the Forsyth, Ga., Democrat.

Our popular senator, Hon. R. A. Eakes, was summoned from Atlanta, last week, to solemnize the marriage ceremony for two couples in this county. It seems that his usefulness is not proscribed.

Rev. Dr. S. Landrum, the highly esteemed pastor of the Coliseum Place Baptist church, of New Orleans, a well known gentleman in Georgia, declines an offer to the Baptist church at Austin, Texas.

New Orleans Times: Miss Lola Hernandez Washington, principal of a seminary in Atlanta, who died a few days ago, belonged to the illustrious Virginia family of that name. By her mother's side she was connected with the old Spanish family of Hernandez, her grandfather, the late General Jose M. Hernandez, preferring the government of the United States, having declined to emigrate with the other members of the family on the cession of Florida in 1819.

GOSSIP.

The belle of "Brick Stores," Newton county, visited Atlanta last week.

The "boys" of Kirkwood will give a large fancy dress ball at the academy on the 15th.

New Orleans Picayune: The handsomest man in Georgia is said to be an Athens barkeeper.

Rumor says that a prominent physician of Atlanta, will bring a bride to the city in a few weeks from Virginia.

Oglethorpe Echo: One of Atlanta's fair daughters will soon be led to the altar by a Lexington gent. We won't tell who.

There is a lady in Atlanta, whose mouth is a visible song—expresses all a song could suggest—hope, love, charity, peace, comfort.

Athens Chronicle: An Atlanta gentleman will lead to the altar a young lady of an adjoining county, who graduated at the L. C. I. last year.

A certain young gentleman of this city, is making quite a reputation in his [illegible] the Art Loan restaurant. The good things there he grunts over like old Dr. Johnson, snaps up like Rousseau, or tears it to pieces like Louis the Eighteenth.

A young lady of north Atlanta, rumor says, has entered into an engagement and she thinks her old beaux have heard of it, and as Richelieu would say the report "has drawn a magic circle around her into which young gentlemen dare not intrude."

Poets from Virgil's time to the present hour sung the pleasures of the table. Could Virgil come to life, and were he to visit the entertainment at the Art Loan, to the table he would turn with especial delight, and tune his harp to the clatter of knife and fork and the gingle of glasses.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

"Old Shipmates," will be the attraction at DeGive's the 15th and 16th, with a matinee Saturday. This popular play, which is in the hands of a good company, will doubtless have a fine run.

Miss Alice King, a grand-daughter of Ex-Governor Collier, of Alabama, and a grand niece of Vice-President Wm. R. King, will make her debut in Selma, in December, and will perhaps visit Atlanta.

At present we will not speak of other attractions that will be at the opera house during the season, but will mention one or two. Neilson will be here 16th of January. So established is her reputation and so well known is she that a word is unnecessary.

During the past week, while not numerous, the entertainments at the opera house have been well patronized except the musical performance of Remenyi, Monday night. Why, we cannot say, for 'tis very sure the distinguished performer fully maintained his national reputation, and gave a most delightful concert.

Madame Janauschek will occupy DeGive's opera house the 13th and present the historical drama "Marie Antionette." This distinguished artiste requires no word from us. Many claim that she is now the greatest living actress of the world. She has genius and power, and these fit her for the characters which she assumes. A very large audience should greet her presentation of Marie Antionette, a subject well suited to her massive genius.

M'lle Rhea, will occupy the opera house January 18th and 19th, and then the 8th of February. In all of her characters she looks and enacts the sweet womanly heroine to the very life. Her little, graceful figure, her delicate, expressive face, which now quivers with emotion, now kindles with passion, and again melts with soft tenderness, seeming the very realization of the author's fancy. Her voice is exquisitely musical, and while her accent is strongly marked every line uttered by her evidences that not only have time and thought been given to the study of the words themselves, but the meaning each is intended to convey. As a star's wardrobe has come to be enrolled under the head of her attractions, we will add that Mlle Rhea's are superb and are worn with taste and exceptional grace.

PICKING FLOWERS.

Baby crept to the door of a room and looked in. Oh, what a pretty room it was! It was full of flowers. The whole floor was covered with roses and lilies and a great many more she didn't know the names of.

She crept up to a great pink rose which lay on some green leaves. She liked roses, but they did not often give her very nice ones, for she had a way of looking at them and then pulling them to pieces very fast.

But here she could help herself, and no one to say no. "Ah-h-h—Baby! No, no!"

She snatched at the rose, but somehow she did not seem to get a good hold of it. Then she tried again, but still to her great surprise her little fat hand missed it.

Then she crept over to where a white lily lay by a big broken leaf. She thought it would be very nice to crush it in her hand.

But she could not get hold of the lily either.

She crept on to another rose, and tried that. But it acted just like the others. She beat it and said: "Da—da—da—da—da—da—DA—DA!" in baby talk, you know, that meant "You are a very bad, naughty flower—won't come to Baby!"

Then she thought she would like to smell it. She always gave very loud sniffs when she saw big people with flowers.

So she bobbed down her little bit of a fuzzy head till she bumped her little bit of a puggy nose.

Just than mamma came to look for Baby. Baby lifted up her little head and said,—

"Aaaa—aaaa AAAA—AAAA!"

Mamma always understand baby talk. She knew in a moment what Baby was saying,—

"I want to get hold of all these pretty flowers, and why can't I?"

Mamma snatched her up and hugged her till you would have thought there couldn't be a bit of Baby left.

And all the time she was saying,—

"O, you darling, precious, little mite of a goosey! If she isn't trying to pick the flowers off the new Brussels carpet!"

Bonner and His Fast Horses.

From the New York Tribune.

All lovers of horses know of the stables of Robert Bonner at his farm near Tarrytown. One bright, cool morning recently a Tribune reporter started with Mr. Bonner for a trip to the farm. It was still early morning when the train stopped at Tarrytown. A carriage awaited Mr. Bonner at the station, and in it the reporter and the editor of the Ledger were soon speeding over the hard, well-kept road. The rolling, well-wooded country was a sea of gold and crimson, through which rose here and there the battlemented towers of modern castles. Occasionally an opening in the gorgeous trees showed a Queen Anne cottage perched on an eminence, or some old Dutch farmhouse nestled in a quiet valley and surrounded by brownfields from which the harvests had long since been gathered. All this told of the season "when the frost is on the pumpkin, and the corn is in the shock."

As the feet of the fleet horses beat a lively music on the compact road, and the pure air of the chilly morning sent the blood tingling through the veins, Mr. Bonner conversed about his horses. "This" said he, indicating one of the chestnut geldings which drew the carriage, "is Grafton, who has trotted in 2:15½. The other is Walton, who has made 2:21. See how trotting horses have improved. When I first began driving, Flora Temple was the only animal on the turf that could make that time. In those days Walton would have been considered a great horse. Now he is regarded as of no account."

"How did it happen that you began to get together such a magnificent collection of animals, Mr. Bonner?"

"Well, about 25 years ago, I was in very poor health—all run down. My physicians told me to get a horse and try driving. I did so; and have been a most enthusiastic lover of the exercise ever since. I never bet on a horse race or allow my horses to trot for money. Everybody knows that. For this reason the time made by my horses since they have been in my possession is not a technical record, that being only obtained when a horse trots in public for money. I set out to prove that a man can own and drive fast horses without making a gambler of himself. Mr. Beecher said to me once: 'Mr. Bonner, as long as you don't bet, your position is as firm as the everlasting hills.'"

Politics and Business.

From the Wall Street News.

Some men don't seem to understand the difference between political assertions and business facts. Three or four days before election a Baltimore lawyer made a political speech in a country village. Being a red-hot republican he naturally gave the democratic party the best he had, and among other things asserted that in case of democratic success the country would have to pay the confederate bonds. Two or three days after election a man walked into the lawyer's office, opened a valise and took from it $920,000 of reb. bonds and said: "What are they worth?" "Four cents a pound." "But the democratic party has triumphed." "What of that?" "But won't the country have to pay these bonds?" "Not by a jugful." The bondholder looked steadfastly at the lawyer for a long minute and then slowly said: "Well, by gum! After ninety-six of us republicans who listened to your speech went and voted the democratic ticket in order to realize on our bonds you now tell me that you didn't mean what you said!"

A Kiss for Mamma.

The car was all ready, the aeronaut saying
A few last words ere he sailed away
To the far blue sky, where the sunbeams straying
Made perfect the glorious summer day;
While thousands and thousands are gathering nigh
To wish him good journey, and bid him good bye.

A wee little maid with her sunny hair falling
Back from her beautiful childish brow,
Sprang away from her nurse, her baby voice calling;
'An p'ease, Mr. man, may I do now?
I want o do up wiv 'oo in 'e sky,
To find my own mamma an' tiss er dood bye."

He kissed the sweet face, while the tear drops were shining
On many a cheek hardened with care;
He unclasped the arms round his neck fondly twining
And sailed from the little one standing there;
But a sweet voice rose to him, clear and free,
"Tell mamma I's dood dirl, an' tiss her for me."

The Need of Education.

The development of our mineral wealth, and the numerous industries which it will create open wide the doors of opportunity and enterprise to the ambitious and aspiring youth of the land. If not fitted and trained by a practical education to embark in these great enterprises, they cannot expect to reap the golden harvests which will be offered to skilled and educated labor.

What Good Cooking Will Do

O, lady fair, so sweet and true,
I have a secret charm for you
To keep your lover's heart your own.
When youth is gone and beauty flown.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR.

For Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Sick Headache, Chronic Diarrhœa, Jaundice, Impurity of the Blood, Fever and Ague, Malaria, and all Diseases caused by Derangement of Liver, Bowels and Kidneys.

SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER.

Bad Breath; Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is felt under the Shoulder-blade, mistaken for Rheumatism; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy, with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, easily startled; feet cold or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and, although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred when but few of them existed, yet examination after death has shown the Liver to have been extensively deranged.

It should be used by all persons, old and young, whenever any of the above symptoms appear.

Persons Traveling or Living in Unhealthy Localities, by taking a dose occasionally to keep the Liver in healthy action, will avoid all Malaria, Bilious attacks, Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage.

If You have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleepless at night, take a dose and you will be relieved.

Time and Doctors' Bills will be saved by always keeping the Regulator in the House!

For, whatever the ailment may be, a thoroughly safe purgative, alterative and tonic can never be out of place. The remedy is harmless and does not interfere with business or pleasure.

IT IS PURELY VEGETABLE,

And has all the power and efficacy of Calomel or Quinine, without any of the injurious after effects.

A Governor's Testimony.

Simmons Liver Regulator has been in use in my family for some time, and I am satisfied it is a valuable addition to the medical science.
J. GILL SHORTER, Governor of Ala.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Ga., says: Have derived some benefit from the use of Simmons Liver Regulator, and wish to give it a further trial.

"The only Thing that never fails to Relieve."—I have used many remedies for Dyspepsia, Liver Affection and Debility, but never have found anything to benefit me to the extent Simmons Liver Regulator has. I sent from Minnesota to Georgia for it, and would send further for such a medicine, and would advise all who are similarly affected to give it a trial as it seems the only thing that never fails to relieve.
P. M. JANNEY, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dr. T. W. Mason says: From actual experience in the use of Simmons Liver Regulator in my practice I have been and am satisfied to use and prescribe it as a purgative medicine.

Take only the Genuine, which always has on the Wrapper the red Z Trade-Mark and Signature of J. H. ZEILIN & CO.

COTTON FACTORY AND MILL FOR SALE AT A BARGAIN.

E. M. Brand vs. James A. Kennedy. } Bill for Injunction, Receiver etc. In Rockdale Superior Court.

By virtue of an order from Hon John D. Stewart, Judge of the Superior Court of Flint circuit, I, the undersigned, as receiver, etc., will sell at public outcry, between the legal hours of sale, on Thursday, the 21st day of December, A. D. 1882, in the city of Conyers, said county of Rockdale, and state of Georgia (unless a satisfactory bid is received at private sale before that time), the following described property, to wit:

That property situated in said county of Rockdale, and known as the Kennedy Mill and Factory property, containing ninety acres more or less, with improvements and appurtenances, lying on the waters of Big Haynes creek, which includes one good merchant mill in fine running order, with a good run of custom. One Cotton Factory building, running gear and machinery, including one regulater, one Willie machine, one whiting thirty inches, two bea or pitcher, six thirty-inch cards, one railway and head, one two-head draw frame, one Mason list speeder, twenty strans, three ring spinning frames, 108 spindle each, one flyer frame 108 spindles each, one flyer fame 120 spindles each, Three reels, one band machine, one bailing press, one bunch press, one engine lathe, one hand lathe, one Hardy grinder, one lot of speeder and spinning bobbins, and other articles too numerous to mention. Therein situated one gin house, cotton press and contents, and workshop under the gin-house and contents. Saw mill, with sash saw, one frame store house; said property is well located, in a good neighborhood, seven miles from Conyers, eight miles from Oxford and ten from Covington. It is a fine water power, and a never failing stream, estimated to be 245 horse-power by W. T. Wynn, former superintendent Atlanta Water-works, and one of the best shoals in the state; including good dwelling house, out houses, with about fifty acres of land in cultivation, with operative and tenant houses. Terms of sale: One half cash, the remainder in one year with interest from date of sale at eight per cent, purchaser paying for titles and bond for titles given until purchase money is paid. All of said property to be sold for benefit of parties to the foregoing bill, etc., and the proceeds held up to await the order of distribution of the court in said cause.

Also one set of twenty-four inch wool cards.
THOMAS H. BRYANS, Receiver, etc.

WOMAN HER BEST FRIEND!

DR. J. BRADFIELD'S

FEMALE REGULATOR.

This famous remedy most happily meets the demand of the age for woman's peculiar and multiform afflictions. It is a remedy for WOMAN ONLY, and for ONE SPECIAL CLASS of her diseases. It is a specific for certain diseased conditions of the womb, and proposes to so control the Menstrual Function as to regulate all the derangements and irregularities of Woman's

MONTHLY SICKNESS.

Its proprietor claims for it no other medical property; and to doubt the fact that this medicine does positively possess such controlling and regulating powers is simply to discredit the voluntary testimony of thousands of living witnesses, who are to-day exulting in their restoration to sound health and happiness.

BRADFIELD'S FEMALE REGULATOR

is strictly a vegetable compound, and is the product of medical science and practical experience directed towards the benefit of

SUFFERING WOMAN!

It is the studied prescription of a learned physician, whose specialty was WOMAN, and whose fame became enviable and boundless because of his wonderful success in the treatment and cure of female complaints. THE REGULATOR is the GRANDEST REMEDY known, and richly deserves its name:

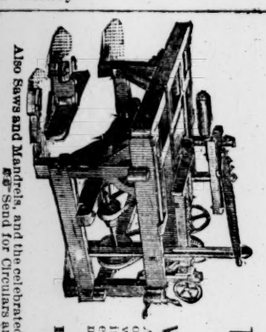

WOMAN'S BEST FRIEND,

Because it controls a class of functions, the various derangements of which cause more ill health than all other causes combined, and thus rescues her from a long train of afflictions, which sorely embitter her life, and prematurely end her existence.
Oh! what a multitude of living witnesses can testify to its charming effects!
WOMAN! take to your confidence this

PRECIOUS BOON OF HEALTH!

It will relieve you of nearly all the complaints peculiar to your sex. Rely upon it as your safeguard for health, happiness and long life.

A WORD TO OUR READERS

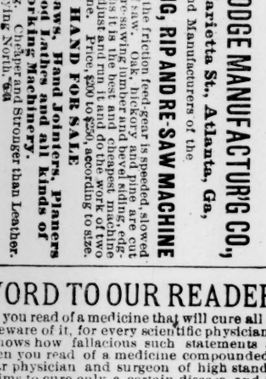

When you read of a medicine that will cure all diseases, beware of it, for every scientific physician on earth knows how fallacious such statements are. But when you read of a medicine compounded by a regular physician and surgeon of high standing that claims to cure only a certain disease, and furnishes high proof that it does this, you can safely try it, and with the assurance that it will cure you. DR. V. R. STONE, late physician and surgeon of the U. S. A., has placed before the public a preparation called

APEPSIA!

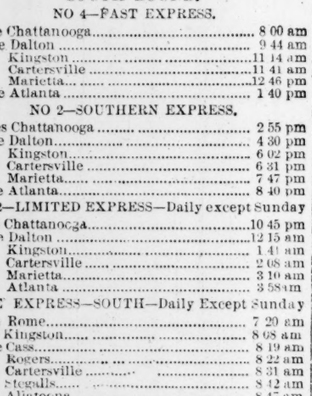

Which no doubt is the greatest scientific preparation yet discovered for the cure of dyspepsia in all its forms and refers to thousands of ladies and gentlemen of the highest respectability that have been cured of cases pronounced incurable by the best physicians in the country. The following references should be sufficient to convince the most sceptical:
Mr Albert Howard, of the Howard Watch and Clock Co, 124 Tremont street, Boston; Prof S Kranberg, 13 Noyes Place, Boston; Dr Samuel W Adams, P O box 1693, New York City; Mr H A Clark, firm Clark Bros & Co, Philadelphia, Pa, case of twenty years standing; Matthew Robinson, 303 North 21st street, Philadelphia, case of dyspeptic vertigo; William Gallogher, Record office, Philadelphia; Frank C Smink, business manager Reading Iron Works, Reading, Pa; Moses Thompson, Thurlow, Pa, P & W B R R; Miss Kate S Villard, Seminole, S C; Captain George M Weymouth, Savannah, Ga; Clarence S Connerat, Savannah, Ga. CHARTER'S IRON TONIC.
PURIFIES THE BLOOD

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. For Debility, Loss of Appetite, Prostration of Vital Powers it is indispensable.

REV. A. ...OBES Writes:—After thorough trial of the IRON TONIC, I take pleasure in stating that I have been greatly benefited by its use. Ministers and Public Speakers will find it of the greatest value where a tonic is necessary. I recommend it as a reliable remedial agent, possessing undoubted nutritive and restorative properties.
Louisville, Ky., Oct. 2, 1882.

REV. J. L. TOWNER, Industry, Ill., says:—"I consider it a most excellent remedy for the debilitated vital forces.
